Oats are practically all cut; most of the crop is in the barns, but considerable is yet in the shock, owing to the recent rains.

Corn is behind in growth on account of late planting, but it has made remarkable headway during the past few weeks.

Roots are showing tremendous growth where well hoed. The weeds, however, are very bad in some fields.

Most of the early potatoes have been disposed of at good prices. The later grown varieties are looking well as a whole as the late blight has not been so serious as was at one time feared.

The numerous stacks of hay to be seen indicate that most of the barns are well filled. Pastures are unusually good for the season, recent rains having given them a good start. The new catch of clover has been satisfactory.

Apples have dropped heavily all summer, and will give a very light return. There will be some average yields of peaches, but the general yield will be rather light.

Vegetables have done well over the Province. The Essex representative estimates that 300 carloads of onions will go from the Leamington district for sale.

Live stock: Cattle have been moving slowly, but the keen demand for hogs has put prices up to a higher notch than has yet been reached, several market sales being reported at from $18.25 to $18.70 a cwt., and in one instance $19. However, about $17.25 has been the ruling price in most quarters.

The pastures, refreshed by recent rains, are keeping up the milk flow most encouragingly for the time of year. Oxford County quotes cheese as bringing 29c a pound. The Dundas representative states that the farmers of that county are arranging to

"MOUNTAIN MADNESS"

By Anna Alice Chapin

This time when he asked her if she wanted to go home Enid agreed without demur. If there was a certain distant atmosphere about her, her fiance did not seem to notice it. He mounted her carefully and impersonally and they set out in the red of an unseasonably hot and fiery sunrise! Something in the air was close and oppressive and thought the winds were still, anyone who knew the mountains would have had a presentiment of impending evil weather. Not for nothing and for no reason do these sultry dawns come thundering in the late summer. Inevitably they are sinister heralds, flinging their blood-red banners across a cowed world, announcing the devastation and storm that follow, hungrily, in their wake.

Old Mason stood at the door of the Toll-gate House and watched them go.

"She's like her mother," he said half-aloud. More spirited, outwardly—but I wonder whether she has half the spirit within her."

Then he went in to his daughter. Polly was crying a little and nursing her wrenched foot. She had not done anything wrong, but she felt vaguely ashamed, and at the same time, sorry for herself.

"Oh, Dad," she moaned, softly into the Toll-keeper's sympathetic shoulder. "there seems to be an awful lot more things we-all girls have to worry about than you-all men!"

"May seem so, honey," he commented her, "but I reckon men and women are mighty like each other, take it all in all. Now, I'll make you some coffee, little gal!"

Down the trail rode Radnor and Enid, silent in that still red dawning. Already the air was hot: a haze lay over the valley.

"Your friend, Miss Baker, is down there," Jack remarked casually.

Enid's tired body straightened in her saddle as if galvanized.

"Jack Radnor, what are you talking about? Alice isn't within miles of Warm Sulphur Springs."

"She wasn't, but she is now," interrupted Radnor, as patiently as he could. Enid's attitude had not been a comfortable one with which to associate, and as for being tired—well, the dear Lord knew he was tired himself. He didn't waste words this morning.

However, as Enid pressed the matter, her feminine curiosity utterly vanquishing her fatigue, he gave her in a somewhat cut-and-dried style an account of the events of the night in the Valley.

Enid listened, utterly absorbed, and when he had finished his narrative of the hold-u, of the Millionaire's Local she drew a deep excited breath.

"And to think I've got those things of Alice's!"

It was Jack's turn to stare. "How came you to have them?" he was beginning, but Enid hurried on.

"Well, I have! Right here—only look!" She spread out some small bright objects in her hare pink palm, and they gleamed in the rose red sunrise light. "There's her Harvard pin—just like mine, and—"

"By the Lord Harry!" laughed Jack heartily. "You've double crossed our friend the bandit this time!"

"How double crossed him? You did not tell me he was a bandit—if you mean the man you left me to take care of—do you?"

"You bet I do! And you've gotten his loot without even knowing what you were doing! Aren't you proud of yourself?"

"For what?" she wanted to know.

"Stuff and nonsense!" said Enid, disdainfully. "I'm only glad I got this stuff because if Alice is here she will want to wear some of it at the Powder Dance to-night."

Jack stared at her. Powder Dance! How had she contrived to remember such a thing here at dawn, among the everlasting hills? Her hair glowlike a nimbus around her small ivory pale face. She looked exalted, exquisite—yet she was already considering the Powder Dance in the Valley that night!

Girls were queer things, and no mistake!

CHAPTER XVI.

NOON IN THE VALLEY.

The softer charm that in her manner lies
Is framed to captivate, yet not surprise;

—Sheridan.

Storm brooded over the Valley all that day, but it was storm couchant, in abeyance, waiting craftily and sullenly behind the thick golden haze which scarcely stirred from hour to hour, so seldom did a wind arise. At the Warm Sulphur Springs the atmosphere was quite as usual. People who came to the Springs were accustomed to having their own way, irrespective of the weather or seasons: a consistent artificiality even in the normal matters of life had made them impervious to those conditions which affect more elementary beings. When they came to the mountains it was for certain definite and defined purposes, and nothing could stand in their way. If it rained, they played bridge instead of golf; that was all the difference it made. They did not even deign to complain; it would have been a confession of mere mortal weakness to have admitted that a beneficent not to say partial God had by any chance made them uncomfortable.

So, in spite of the sultriness and the falling barometer, half past eleven in the morning saw the place in full swing. The real patients, rheumatic and gouty cripples on crutches and in chairs made their way to the Bath House. Those jaded men and fagged women who were paying the price of too much pleasure, or too much work, or too much society, or too much gormandising, or too much ambition, or too much of the variously expensive pursuits of life, were struggling out to play such games as they dared to play without creating too inconvenient an appetite for food and drink.

The band was playing in the pagoda-shaped bandstand overlooking the tennis courts. It was pre-eminently the voice of the place—that band—eloquently expressive of its energetic, yet carefree and luxurious life—a life given up solely to having the best possible time compatible with taking a cure. The same wise instinct which made Ned Sperry confine his afternoon tea music to violins and 'cellos, caused him to prescribe brass in large doses in the middle of the day.

The members of the hotel orchestra were domiciled in a tumbledown old house on the outskirts of the golf-links, where their practice could not disturb the guests, and it was generally believed that Sperry made august visitations in the dead of night with menus—one means, programs, of course—for each day. It is possible enough, for like all geniuses, no detail was too trifling to command his attention. At any rate the Warm Springs Band was getting a deserved reputation. He had contrived to put the Virginia sunshine into the clarionets and trombones even as he put the colored electric lights into the soft and often muted strings.

Usually melodies rang out blithely; seeming to come dancing down the fresh winds that blew robustly from the northern end of the valley. But to-day the very blithest melodies selected by Sperry and approved by his leader or vice versa, seemed to fall with a heavier cadence than they should have.

"There's something wrong with the air!" said one of the musicians, a bit disconsolately. He was artistic and a sensitive soul.

But the Springs resorters were for the most part not sensitive. Already the whole place, surfaced with rolling lawns that looked like bright green plush, was dotted with men in white flannel and ducks and women in rainbow gowns.

Mrs. Forsythe was sitting with Judge Denby near the tennis court, where their two children, with Alice Baker and Jack Radnor, were playing tennis. Mrs. Forsythe looked a shade tired—for she had been in a fever of nervousness until Enid reached the hotel safely at sunrise—but she was as charming as usual in an exquisitely simple two hundred dollar embroidered muslin frock of a subtle lavender which was close enough to rose color to bring out the delicate flush of her smooth cheeks.

"Look at that child of mine, if you please!" she exclaimed in humorous despair. "She came home at daybreak this morning and she is playing tennis as enthusiastically as though she had had nine hours of sleep!"

"And every one of the nine a beauty sleep!" supplemented Judge Denby. "She really is the most radiantly pretty thing that I have seen in many a day!"

Mrs. Forsythe smiled fondly at the vivid little figure as it sped across the court with the swiftness and the grace of a wheeling bird.

Enid was dressed in white and scarlet and had thrown her hat aside as usual. The sun burned her hair to flame: her face was flushed and eager.

She was playing with Ralph Denby against Alice Baker and Jack. This assorting of partners was entirely her doing. She laughingly insisted that Alice and Ralph were no good when they played together, but it was really because she did not want Jack for a partner, a fact of which he was perfectly well aware. He felt decidedly angry with her, and his mood made him, if anything, somewhat handsomer than usual, putting an added touch of color in his brown cheek, and an unwonted sparkle in his dark eyes.

"What a decorative thing he is!" Alice had murmured in Enid's ear, when they had come down to join the young men an hour earlier.

To which Enid had retorted, with marked acidity:

"Useless articles have to have some excuse for being made!"

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever!" Alice had reminded her. "You unappreciative little savage! A perfectly good objet d'art is being wasted on you!"

Alice herself was looking very handsome indeed; but though she was neither awkward nor heavily built, she looked both when compared to Enid. Jack Radnor found some perverse and grudging satisfaction in looking at Enid across the net. She might be hard and obstinate and wilful and numberless other unpleasant things, but she was adorable.

Judge Denby sprang up almost as alertly as his son might have done, and tossed it back with an easy pitch. Mrs. Forsythe watching him, thought him as handsome in his own way as either of the young fellows on the court.

"I think," she said to him smiling, when he had returned to her side, "that you are as impertinently fresh and energetic as Enid!—No, I truly believe you are worse! What do you mean by looking like that, when, as I know perfectly well, you have been up practically all night, waiting for Ralph? 'Do you think at your age it's quite right?'"

The Judge laughed, a round and mellow laugh.

"It is because of a clear conscience and a beautiful disposition!" he confided. "There is nothing like them to keep one feeling and looking quite young! As you must know," he added, with the old-fashioned, flattering intonation which always pleased Mrs. Forsythe.

"I do not believe," he went on meaningly, "in encouraging the shameless feminine sport of fishing, but——"

Mrs. Forsythe laughed.

"Augustine is a very remarkable maid!" she said demurely.

"Is she wholly responsible?"

"Wholly! I tell you, she is remarkable."

"She is beyond price!" said the Judge with solemn emphasis.

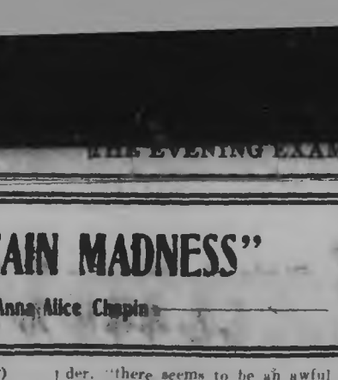
a Present for the Soldier



YOU can depend on the mothers to think of the little things which will be appreciated by the boy in the camp or trenches. And one article which many a mother has given her boy at the last moment is Dr. Chase's Ointment.

There are so many ways that Dr. Chase's Ointment is useful to the soldier that it becomes invaluable to him. It is used for chafing and skin irritation resulting from heavy clothing and equipment. It brings comfort to sore, scalded feet after the long march. Applied to wounds it prevents blood-poisoning and heals the skin. And it should never be forgotten that Dr. Chase's Ointment is the most effective treatment obtainable for piles, a distressing ailment which results from contact with the cold earth, whether in camp or trench.

The Canadian soldiers have been well supplied with this standard ointment, and, judging by their many letters of appreciation, there seems to be few things more keenly appreciated. Just try it in the next parcels you send to the front.

THOUGHT CHILD WAS DYING

"Cholera Infantum"

DR. FOWLER'S

Extract of Wild Strawberry Cured Her

Mothers should look well after their children during the hot summer months, as this is the time of the year this trouble is most prevalent. It begins with a profuse diarrhoea, the stomach becomes irritated, vomiting and purging set in, and the child rapidly loses flesh, and becomes weak, prostrated and languid. Mrs. writes: "I can recommend, most highly, Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. A friend of mine whose little daughter was ill with cholera infantum was given up by the doctors. The little one's mother asked me to come in and see the child. I told her I had a bottle of Dr. Fowler's" and asked her if she would try it. When the bottle was half used the child was well. This cure was a miraculous one, for I thought the child was dying at the time."

There is nothing can take the place of Dr. Fowler's.

There is nothing just as good.

HARVESTERS! LOOK!

36,000 farm labourers are wanted in the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Albera, for the harvesting of the crop.

The Canadian Northern Railway will operate the first excursion trains for the West, leaving Toronto Union Depot at 9 a.m. and 10 p.m. August 21st, and 10 p.m. August 30th, and running through solid to Winnipeg.

The equipment will consist of electric lighted colonist cars, lunch counter cars, and, in addition, the railway will continue their last year's innovation of keeping a special car for the accommodation of single women and families, and of cupants will be separated from the other passengers.

The territory served by the Canadian Northern Lines offers the widest choice of employment with high wages, but regardless of where you may locate, remember we give the best service to Winnipeg, where you will re-purchase to final destination, no matter on what Line it may be.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

WOMAN'S WAY

By MARJORIE CLOUGH

The ladies of Ringwood, having decided to establish an orphan asylum, met for the purpose and organized. Then they appointed various committees and adjourned for one week, when they came together again to hear the reports. All committees reported favorable results except the committee appointed to rent a house for the asylum.

"The only place large enough for the purpose," reported Mrs. Imogen Brainard, chairman of the committee, "and with grounds such as we must have is the Canfield property. It has been vacant for two years, but has just been taken by a men's literary club, to be called the Goldsmith. Unfortunately a lease was signed by the owner and by the officers of the club only yesterday."

"Perhaps," said mild mannered Miss Blanding, "if the gentlemen of the club knew that we wanted it for the dear children they would"—

"Hold on to it," Mrs. Jimber continued, "just as tenaciously as they would if we wanted it for any other purpose. Far be it from me to become a suppliant to them. I prefer a heroic method. I move that a committee be appointed to go to them and demand that they give up the property to us."

The motion was carried, and Mrs. Jimber, Miss Bates and Miss Blanding were appointed on the committee, Mrs Jimber being chairman.

The three members of the Goldsmith club's committee on house consisted of Mr. Flint, Mr. Downing and Mr. Fairweather. Mr. Flint was among men what Mrs. Jimber was among women. When the asylum committee called upon him to give up to them the Canfield property he replied with an emphatic "No!" Messrs. Downing and Fairweather, though sympathizing with him in retaining the place for the club, could not but feel that Miss Bates and Miss Blanding, who were comely, looked upon the refusal as extremely ungallant.

Mrs. Jimber issued a request that the members of the club meet, march to the property in dispute, take possession of it and hold it. Mr. Flint got wind of the movement and barred all the doors and windows.

This made a deadlock for both clubs. The men knew that if they opened the house the women would take possession, and so long as it was locked up it could not be used either for a club or an orphan asylum. There was a meeting of the women's committee to take measures for further procedure. Mrs. Jimber was in favor of proposing that every woman interested in the asylum cut every member of the club. Her colleagues did not agree with her as to the effectiveness of this measure. Then the chairman suggested that they use militant methods, threatening to destroy the property. But it was pointed out to her that the club was not the owner of it and might prefer to see it ruined rather than be forced to give it up. Then Mrs. Jimber lost her temper and told the other two members of the committee that she would have nothing more to do with the matter.

One day Miss Bates heard that Mr. Flint had been called away. She wrote a note to Mr. Downing stating that a majority of the asylum committee would be pleased to see the club's committee that evening at her house for the purpose of making a proposition that would, she thought, be satisfactory to the men and end the deadlock upon the property in dispute.

Since Mr. Flint was away and Mrs. Jimber would have nothing more to do with the matter the interview was between Mr. Downing and Mr. Fairweather on the one part and Miss Bates and Miss Blanding on the other. The two men, both of whom were bachelors, went to the place of meeting together, each hoping to parry what was expected to be some sharp move on the part of the women and do it without wounding their feelings.

Miss Bates, by way of smoothing the way, she said, proposed a game of cards, and before it was finished a maid brought in refreshments. After that Mr. Downing paired with Miss Bates and Mr. Fairweather with Miss Blanding. Each gentleman was feeling very comfortable and very happy when Miss Bates whispered to Miss Blanding:

"I have named a price at which Mr. Downing will recommend that the club let us have the Canfield property. I have agreed to give him a kiss before both clubs assembled when we take possession. He has accepted. See if you can get the same terms from Mr. Fairweather."

Miss Blanding succeeded in securing the terms, both men thinking the matter a bluff. As soon as the ladies had effected the arrangement they declared the conference ended.

The next morning the two committeemen received a note addressed to them by their entertainers of the night before stating that they would be on the steps of the Canfield property the next afternoon ready to keep their contract.

The men now began to consider the position they were in. If the women had the hardihood to face two clubs in such a case of graft the men had not. They drew up a statement giving the best of reasons why the Goldsmith club should assign their lease of the property in question to the asylum managers. Their recommendation was accepted.

Nature knows no pause in progress and development and attributes her curse on all inaction.

OF BRITISH PARTIES MOVE FOR ABOLITION

The Subject to be Debated in the House of Lords.

LONDON, Aug. 28.— When Parliament resumes, Lord Charnwood will move in the House of Peers a resolution declaring "that inasmuch as the division between the two great historic parties in Great Britain has since the outbreak of the war become obsolete, the continuance of their party organization and the retention by their managers of funds available for the promotion of Parliamentary candidates is mischievous."

It's ever so simple to make—just follow directions in recipes and you will be rewarded with the daintiest and most tasty layer cake you ever baked.

CAUTION! — Be sure it's Cowan's Perfection Cocoa you use—no other gives such a perfect chocolate color or so pleasing a taste. Remember the name.

TRY THESE RECIPES.

COCOA ICING.

4 teaspoonfuls Cowan's Perfection Cocoa
2 cups icing sugar
2 tablespoonfuls cold water.
2 tablespoonfuls hot water

Place the cocoa in a saucepan and mix with cold water until of a perfectly smooth appearance. The hot water is then added and the whole is then cooked from 1 to 2 minutes. Add the flavoring and a pinch of salt. Enough sugar should then be added to make the whole mixture sufficiently stiff to spread evenly. To ensure against lumps beat these ingredients until smooth and glossy. Should the mixture be too thick a little cold water may be added, and, on the other hand, add a little sugar if not sufficiently thick.

COCOA FILLING.

½ cup Cowan's Perfection Cocoa
¾ cup sugar
2 tablespoonfuls milk
1 egg
2 teaspoonfuls butter
1 teaspoonful vanilla
Pinch of salt

The whole should be cooked in a double boiler till the substance thickens. Care should be taken to stir constantly. Now cool the mixture and add the flavoring. About 1 cup of nuts or cocoanut in the same proportion, or even mixed fruits, make a splendid addition to this filling.

The War Needs of Canada

The Need That the Draft Be Uniformly Enforced Throughout Canada

(By Benjamin Apthorp Gould)

THREE

(By Benjamin Apthorp Gould).

The most serious mistake, as it seems to me, made by Canada at the beginning of war was not the adoption of the voluntary system but the failure to make the operation of the voluntary system, other than voluntary.

We, most of us, recognize to-day that the voluntary system was in fact wrong from the beginning: that it is of necessity undemocratic, unjust, and inefficient; that under it men are taken who ought not to be allowed to enlist and men are left behind who ought to be compelled to enter the army at once. We know that under it the bravest, the most intelligent and the most patriotic are taken first and exposed to being killed off at the beginning; that the weak, the cowardly and the selfish are allowed to evade their responsibility.

Nevertheless, at the beginning it was out of the question that Canada should attempt to raise an army under any system other than that of voluntaryism. No one foresaw that the war would last so long, or that the need from Canada in either men or supplies would approach what it has proved to be. The war has been of great educational value in making the people understand more truly the relationship which exists in a modern democracy between the citizen and the State. There was not, however, three years ago any such understanding of this relationship as would have been necessary to make possible an adoption at that time of any system of conscription.

At the beginning, the volunteers came forward almost entirely upon their own initiative, and later recruiting leagues were established upon the initiative of the citizens of patriotic localities. In neiher case was there any thorough and competent organization of recruiting by the Government, but, as stated above, volunteering itself was voluntary. The consequence was naturally that in those communities where the tradition of British achievement in war was strongest, the enlistments were most numerous and the people best understood the real meaning of the war. On the other hand, in those communities where a proper understanding of the war was most needed least was attempted and least accomplished.

One necessary and very evil result of this system of voluntary volunteering was that the enlistments were not distributed in any proper proportion according to population through out the Dominion. Consequently, certain provinces, most particularly Quebec, did not participate in the burden of supplying men in a due proportion, and the sorely needed unity of Canada was not only promoted by the war, but even greatly prejudiced. It is inevitble that those communities which have given most generously of their manhood to the war should look with anger and resentment at the communities which have fallen short of furnishing a proper quota. Unity is more needed during time of war than at any other time, and is capable of being splendidly promoted at such time by the uniform service of all parts of the country. Had all the provinces shared alike in proportion to their population of military age in the military burdens of the country, there would have been a community of interest, developed by their community of sacrifice, which would have gone far to destroy the lesser differences and resentments which previously had existed. The truth of this is strikingly shown in Great Britain, where England, Scotland, and Wales have all given to a great common cause to the utmost of their ability, and where to-day the respect of each part of Great Britain for the other parts is far greater than ever before.

It is of course late in the day to attempt to accomplish anything of this kind in Canada, but nevertheless I feel convinced that the attempt must be made and that much good may be accomplished in this direction under the new Conscription Act. The province which requires conscription for its own sake more than any other is the Province of Quebec. Quebec cannot afford to remain isolated from the rest of the country, not only by language and creed, but by at least the appearance of lack of patriotism. Quebec will have to be a part of Canada for generations after this war is over, and Quebec cannot therefore for her own sake allow herself so to act as to be regarded with contempt and aversion by any of her sister provinces.

It is clear, therefore, to anyone who looks far into the future that the hope for a true Canadian unity lies in the common support by all of Canada of the burdens of this war. It is also clear that if this common support be not brought about, the province which will in the future suffer most will be that province which fails to bear its full share of the burden. The French-Canadian has proved by the glorious Twenty-Second Battalion at Courcelette that he can be as magnificently brave as any of other Canadians; it is necessary for the future of their own province that the French Canadians show that the valor of this battalion was not exceptional, but that the same courage and fortitude can be expected from every French-Canadian battalion as from the battalions recruited from the other provinces. And in order to prove this, there must be enough French-Canadian battalions to permit of a just generalization from their conduct.

It is therefore clear that the selfish interests of the people of the Province of Quebec require that at this great time they shall act unselfishly. It is only by giving greatly now that they can gain greatly in the future. I believe that the wisest men in Quebec recognise the truth of what I have said, and that when the time comes Quebec will loyally accept the burdens imposed by conscription. If I am right, Quebec will gain for the future far more than Quebec will at the present lose.

It is also of vital importance for the authorities of the Roman Catholic Church of Quebec, if it is not to lose its position in Canada, that the impression widely existing that it is opposed to the participation in the war of the people of the Province of Quebec be destroyed. If Quebec takes no real part in Canadian deeds of arms, and if this failure be, either rightly or wrongly, attributed to the Church, there is little question in my mind but that the Church will ultimately have to pay in the curtailment of its privileges and possibly even in such disestablishment as took place in France. The great majority of Canadians are most tolerant of the opinions of others in religious matters, but I think that they are determined that no Church or creed shall interfere in political matters or in questions of national policy. The Catholic Church cannot afford to raise any opposition to the effective enforcement of conscription in Quebec; indeed, if it be far seeing enough to appreciate it, the selfish interests of this Church require it to take an active part in seeing that such conscription shall be enforced. In no other way can it stem the tide of resentful opposition which is setting so strongly against it on account of the belief that to the Church the failure of recruiting in Quebec is largely due.

Let the new conscript armies of Canada be justly representative of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and Canada and every Province will profit in unification in reintegration—in becoming cemented into an entity which shall be truly that of a nation.

Old Resident Of Kinmount Passes Away

Death Claims Mr. Joseph Conway Father of One of the Quaker Oats Fire Victims

KINMOUNT, Aug. 29.—Rain every day last week, but the weather seems to be settled during yesterday and to-day. As yet we have had no frost; should the frost not come during this moon it would do very little harm to gardens or fields except to the late corn.

Mr. and Mrs. Wright and family of Toronto, also Mr. Lyons, father of Mrs. Wright, are the guests of Mrs. H. Coben. A number of their friends are expected to motor from Toronto to remain over Labour Day.

On Saturday night, August 18th, death claimed one of the oldest and most highly respected residents of this village, in the person of Mr. Joseph Conway. One daughter had predeceased him and also his son, John, who was one of the victims of the fire which destroyed the Quaker Oats buildings in Peterborough. Mr. Conway leaves a wife and two sons, Patrick and Frank, to mourn the loss of a loving husband and father.

Rev. Mr. McFadden of Minden and Rev. Mr. Williams of Kinmount exchanged pulpits on Sunday last. Mrs. McFadden visited with Mrs. Williams, while Mr. McFadden drove to Cobocouk and returned on Monday and also spent a few hours with Mrs. N. Crowe, who was an old friend.

Mrs. McFadden (nee Miss Hamilton) was a resident of Bobcaygeon for some time.

Mr. and Mrs. Harding and family are visiting the parents of Mrs. Harding, Mr. and Mrs. Dunbar of Blind River.

Mrs. John Molyneaux is visiting her son, Bruce, and family, in Toronto.

NEGROES BACK TO SOUTH.

The Exodus Turns On Itself — Northern Labour Requirements Too Exacting For Them.

CHATTANOOGA, Aug. 27. — The "giving back to Dixie" move on the part of Negro labourers is now unmistakably under way. Every train entering Chattanooga discharges some of those former coloured citizens who are returning from Detroit, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, and other northern cities to which they had recently emigrated.

Records given are race prejudice and the enactions of the "labour bosses" in the northern centres, who drive the men to work at higher pressure then the negroes were accustomed to in the south.

When in doubt, keep quiet.

THE ITALIAN ADVANCE IS UNCHECKED

TOLMENO DEFENCES ARE THREATENED

General Cadorna's Forces Are Continuing Victorious Advance

Further Successes Are Reported From the Italian Front Where Austrians Fail to Stop Advance ---Tolmino is Threatened by New Moves Made By General Cadorna---Little Activity Recorded From the British Front.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:—

(By Carl D. Groat, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, August 30.—Peace this winter or next spring as a result of President Wilson'h reply to the Pope, or at least two more years of war—that is the prospect ahead. Military men and diplomats constructed that outlook to-day in the peace situation. Insofar as the United States is concerned it is going ahead with war preparations.

Military men believe that there is a chance of peace in the President's note. They point out that Germany is showing evidences of "cracking" under the strain, and they believe that the Liberals will force a reconstruction of the German government. This must be bona-fide, State Department authorities said, or it will be futile. It will be up to Germany's leaders to decide whether to fight on or accept peace now. The President's note is concrete evidence that the ambition of her enemies is not to crush her.

LONDON, August 30.—Having attained practical dominance of the Bainsizza Plateau, General Cadorna's troops began a vast flanking movement northward. Tolmino is the immediate objective of this drive.

Front despatches to-day indicated the Italian troops were forging ahead and had arrived almost before the preliminary line of defence of this Austrian city. At the same time another Italian army reached out beyond Monte Cucco for a coincidental drive eastward on the same city. Rome cables told of further progress gained east on the plateau toward the Chiapvano Valley. It is through this gap that one of the main arteries of the Austrian communication between the northern and southern armies, the latter guarding Trieste, is run. A victory here will be of vast strategic importance. All despatches to-day emphasized the ferocity of the fighting in Bainsizza sector. The Austrians are offering desperate resistance.

(By W. M. Forrest, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

PARIS, August 30.—France proposes to put the cost of the war on those best able to bear it by taxing war profits up to eighty per cent. Minister of Finance Thierry made this announcement to-day.

LONDON, August 30.—Further British operations on the west front were hampered by a heavy rainstorm to-day. All Field Marshal Haig reported was enemy artillery firing in the Nieuport sector, Flanders.

LONDON, August 30.—The sinking of the American schooner Laura C. Anderson by bombs yesterday was announced by the Admiralty to-day. The crew landed at Portsmouth.

LONDON, August 30.—The Russian Provisional Government decided on the partial re-establishment of the death penalty to restore discipline in the army, according to a Central News despatch from Moscow.

Cable quoted Premier Kerensky as making announcement to the Russian conference concluding: "This hurts us to the very soul, but for the salvation of the country we will kill with all our soul."

NEW YORK, August 30.—Two million New Yorkers in a whirlwind of patriotic frenzy shouted farewell to-day to 25,000 khaki-clad men of the Twenty-Seventh Division comprising National Guard units from all over the State, marching down Fifth avenue.

Germany Must Be Crushed Says Wm. Jennings Bryan

CHICAGO, Ill., Monday.—William Jennings Bryan, in Chicago for a Chautauqua address, declared to-day that peace can come only through the overthrow of Germany. In travelling over the country he has found the desire to support the government in the war almost universal, he said.

"My idea is that any dissension among us as to the prosecution of the war will have a tendency to prolong it and make it more costly in money and men," he said. "The more any one favours peace the more loyally he should support the government as the only means of hastening peace.

"There can be but one end to the war—that is the overthrow of Germany. I find the desire to support the government practically universal. If a different impression prevails anywhere it is based on the fact that newspapers report the exceptional thing rather than the ordinary thing. If one man of a thousand utters some disloyal sentiment the disloyalty of the one man is announced while the loyalty of the 999 is not emphasised.

"We shall, of course, win the war, whether Russia is able to hold her position or not. Any and except in our favour is inconceivable."

MONTREAL YOUTH SHOT.

MONTREAL, Aug. 29. — "This is what I'll greet those who come to conscript me with," said J. Lariviere, 17 years of age, to his friend, Gerard Parent, about the same age, this afternoon, showing Parent a loaded revolver while the two boys were at the store of J. E. Fournier Company, 81 St. Lawrence Boulevard, where young Lariviere was employed. In a few minutes Lariviere fell mortally wounded. Parent had taken the revolver to examine it, and while doing this he accidentally shot his chum.

BIG TAX ON WAR PROFITS

Amendment Increasing Revenue Agreed to in U. S. Senate.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—To meet the radical movement for greater taxation of war profits, the Senate Finance committee to-day agreed to amendments carrying war profits taxes of more than 33 per cent. in place of the present provisions for 26 per cent. The amendments would increase the war profits tax yield from $[illegible] to $1,000,000,000 in addition to the taxes under the present law and yield a third of the bill's total taxes.

SIR WILFRID'S SPEECH STRONG MEDICINE FOR QUEBEC TO TAKE

"Behooves Us as British Subjects to See That Conscription is Carried Out as Harmoniously as Possible" He Tells the House

CAUSES DISCUSSION

OTTAWA, Aug. 30.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier's statement in the House regarding the duty of good citizens toward the conscription bill is to-day the talk of the town and will be one of the big features for discussion at the Liberal caucus. Sir Wilfrid said:

"I consider that whether we approve of the measure, it having now become law with the sanction of His Excellency the Governor General, it behooves us all as British subjects to see that it is carried out as harmoniously as possible."

This is strong medicine for Quebec, but it is recalled that other French members of Parliament, notably Hon. Chas. Marcil have repeatedly said that Quebec is essentially law abiding. Hon. Jacques Bureau, Solicitor-General during Laurier's regime, declared to-day that "Quebec is more loyal than Ontario and you can quote me as saying so. I stand by every word that Sir Wilfrid said. Some of the fellows in Ontario who assassinate the King for money attempt to talk to us about loyalty. They talked about battles being lost while the conscription bill was delayed, yet they did not apply closure. When, however, it becomes a question of money in the C.N.R. deal they do apply the closure. Money is more important to them than lives.

Some other French members are not so quick to interpret Sir Wilfrid's words literally. "They must be read," said Mr. Gauthier, of St. Hyacinthe, in conjunction with what he said lately, namely, that it is my duty to consult on this side of the House both those who approve and those who do not approve of the bill."

CONSCRIPTION ONLY ISSUE

Borden Acceptable as Leader Says Hon. Edward Brown

Special to The Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Aug. 30. —"There is only one issue before the people now, and that' is conscription," declared Hon. Edward Brown. Asked for an opinion on the situation at Ottawa he said: "This is no time for pussy foot work or for hedging. People must be either for conscription or against it. In my mind, Sir Robert Borden is acceptable as a leader of a union government and I am not in sympathy with any attempt to drive a hard bargain at this time. Sir Robert Borden was the father of the compulsory military service bill and he is the logical leader of a union government to carry it out. I would get behind a National government with Sir Robert as its head."

Railway Policy For The Future

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Aug. 29.— When Sir Robert Borden yesterday forecasted co-operative management of all the railways in Canada, he did not go into details as to the method, but he said enough to indicate the results. These are to be two-fold. First, the branch line facilities of any railway in any one district are to be at the disposal of any other railway; secondly, unnecessary parallel lines are to be eliminated. These ends are to be achieved before the government nationalizes other railways than the C.N.R. They are to be the result, to quote the Premier's own language, "of the companies and the government getting together."

SIR WILFRID LAURIER TO HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members of this House are aware that the principle of this bill is one of which I did not and do not approve. But, while that is my sincere position, it is also known that my opinion is not entertained by all the members of the Opposition. There are important and representative members of the Opposition who approve the principle of the military service act, and the policy of the Government in applying it. Their convictions are as sincere as my own. But the military service bill is a measure of such importance that I consider that, whether we approve or do not approve of its principle, it having become law and having just received the sanction of his Excellency the Governor-General, it behooves us all, as loyal British subjects, to do our part to see that it is carried out as harmoniously as possible. Under the circumstances, I deem it my duty to accept the invitation of my Right Honourable friend. It will be my duty to consult, on this side of the House, both those who approve and those who do not approve of the bill, and I shall communicate the result to the Prime Minister as soon as possible."—Sir Wilfrid Laurier's statement to the House yesterday when invited by the Premier to nominate half of the members of the Board of Selection.

The following is a letter from Captain Widdifield, written to his partner, Mr. G. N. Gordon, a short time before he was wounded, and this letter shows the intensity of the Canadian and British fire before the City of Lens at the time of the last Canadian drive:—

France, August 9, 1917.

"Dear Mr. Gordon,—This is my third attempt to write you to-day, but every time I begin, the guns make such a disturbance, that it is impossible to accomplish anything. Just at present our heavies are quiet but now Fritz has opened up and some of them are uncomfortably near. He hit our billet two days ago and again this morning. I was upstairs both times but received no damage, only this morning he made me do a couple of sommersaults much to the amusement of my Batman who was fairly close to me.

"The billet I am in just now, used to be a private hotel run by two old maids, and in peace time, I guess they did very well, as they certainly have a fine place and seem to know their business.

"Just at present, of course, they are very upset, and one can hardly blame them as it sure is a shame to see such a fine place being shelled, such as has been the case this last week.

"A couple of days ago I ran into Lieut. Dupy, and we spent a while together.

"The weather has been quite a lot brighter these last few days, but even yet things are very wet.

"Lately I have had quite a few exciting times, but none of them amounted to very much, however at the time they seemed quite sufficient.

"The war seems to be lasting quite a long time, but I suppose it can't go on for ever and some day it will be all over."

Sincerely yours,
"WIDDIFIELD."

OMEMEE, Aug. 29. — The many friends of Pte. Peter Burchell will regret exceedingly to learn that it has been found necessary to amputate one leg owing to the severe wound which he received while in action.

Pte. Burchell is thought to be on his way home.

Thousands of soldiers, returning to Canada for base duty because active service in France has rendered them unfit to be sent back to the trenches, will be beneficially affected by an order which is being sent out from the Militia headquarters to the officers commanding all the military districts in Canada.

In the past when men were sent back from overseas to do duty at home they were compelled to pay their own transportation if they wanted a furlough at their homes before taking up their new work. While this drawback did not deter the men from taking advantage of the two weeks' leave allowed, the men in many cases felt keenly the outlay needed to take them home, particularly if they were located at a depot far from their homes.

The new order authorises the payment of the fares of all the men who want to go home for a furlough. Through the kindly intervention of officers, graduates of overseas service, the government has decided to defray the cost of carrying the returned men home at the public expense. Also in the past the men sent home for further medical treatment under the auspices of the Military Hospitals Commission were allowed two weeks' furlough when they reported at the convalescent homes for treatment and their fares home were defrayed on way. The new order affects them in that it authorizes the payment of their fares both ways.

KINGSTON, Aug. 29.—Major Thomas Ashmore Kidd has been appointed deputy assistant adjutant and quartermaster general to succeed Lieut.-Col. H. R. Wilson, who leaves the military service on Saturday next. This announcement comes as a pleasant surprise to thousands of

UNANIMOUSLY ENDORSE THE ACKERMAN CO. BY-LAW

Greater Peterboro' Association Arrange to Facilitate Voting Next Thursday and to Put the Facts of the By-law Plainly Before the Ratepayers.

A PROMISING INDUSTRY

The Greater Peterborough Association gave its unanimous approval last night to the Ackerman by-law to fix the company's assessment at $23,790 for ten years. On the suggestion of Mr. G. N. Gordon it was decided to republish the clauses of the by-law in plain, clear and concise terms that may be readily understood by every ratepayer. It was pointed out by Mr. Gordon and other members that whatever concession the company may receive is largely prospective, rather than immediate, and in any event will place practically no burden upon the taxpayers. It is proposed to fix this year's assessment of $23,790 on the land and property for ten years. The regular taxes on that assessment will be paid, also local improvement, frontage and other taxes incident to any property in Peterborough.

Mr. Gordon stated that he had not heard a single objection to the by-law and he felt that if the plain facts were placed before the ratepayers it would pass with a large majority. In Sherbrooke, Three Rivers, Montreal and other cities shoe manufacturing had developed greater than any ordinary class of industry in Canada. These factories had shown a wonderful growth.

Mr. Walter Stocker said he hadn't heard of any opposition to the by-law.

GETTING AN INDUSTRY WE HAVEN'T GOT.

Mr. D. W. Dumble discussed the salient features of the measure. It did not propose to relieve the Ackerman company of any taxes it was now paying, but simply to fix the present assessment for ten years by way of encouraging the company to add to their business a new branch of manufacturing.

"We know the factory and we know the people," declared Mr. Dumble. "They offer us something we haven't got now, if we will forego something we haven't got now. The people have confidence in them and know that they persent no risk."

Mr. Dumble remarked that promoters of new and uncertain companies had often been offered inducements greatly in excess of what this by-law contemplated. But, in this case the company was secure and there was every prospect that the new industry would develop, thereby increasing the number of workmen in Peterborough. This city had lost nothing by its assistance to the industries that had located here. Mr. Dumble enumerated the principal manufacturing companies and added, "We can't afford to stop now. We should follow what we have proved to be successful."

"If we want a new industry on the terms that we are giving nothing for something we cannot afford to refuse to carry this by-law."

Mr. Dumble said he felt that immigration would rallow to Canada after the war, the soldiers would return to the routine of living and it was essenial that there should be employment for them.

A large property holder himself, Mr. Dumble said he would vote for the by-law and do what he could to support it. "The city should give it

LIBERALS IN CAUCUS

Question of Nominating Members For Selection Board Considered

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Aug. 29.—The Liberals held a caucus for two hours this morning. At the conclusion of the deliberations, Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated that the question of nominating members to a board of selection in connection with the Military Service Act had been considered at length and canvassed among the members. He intimated that it had been left in his hands to decide the matter, but that a sub-committee had been appointed to consult further with him. It is possible that a further caucus will be held. Sir Wilfrid stated that he did not expect to have an announcement for the House this week.

Dr. Clark, of Red Deer, and Albert Champagne, of Battleford, were not invited to the caucus. J. G. Turriff, of Assiniboia, did not attend.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

THURSDAY, AUG. 30, 1917

ENCOURAGING

It does not seem that the long lists of Canadian casualties of these days, of which Peterborough has its share, should have anything for us but regret. But they are encouraging because they are the price of the victory which Canadians are helping to bring nearer, and which, as a matter of fact, is drawing steadily nearer. The steady, resistless, military pressure of the allies, the results of the pressure of war represented by the isolation by the British blockade of Germany and the other powers in the matter of food and other supplies, show that the resistance—it is no longer, aggression—of the Central Powers, is weakening.

The despatches told us yesterday of the epidemics of dysentery and—a new sort of epidemic—tuberculosis, prevailing in Germany, due to the widespread privation of food and other necessaries. This indicates a fatal weakening of the Central Powers, and if true is a proof of the effectiveness of the British blockade—a gruesome, but necessary, and in view of the enemy we have to fight, a warranted measure of war.

Of course, these stories of the results of food shortage and generally hard conditions of living may be exaggerated, but the steady pressure exerted on the central allies, the otherwise known effectiveness of the blockade, give us to know that the Teutonic Powers are virtually beaten, and if only the reports mentioned are half true there is encouragement in them. This war is a long, tedious and devastating thing, but the end—the victorious end—is coming nearer every day. The clouds are still dark and lowering, but the light of the dawn of a day of victory is breaking through. The end may be still distant, but the progress to that end is steady and unbroken, and every day's developments—even with Russia's momentary failure—is encouraging.

If Premier Borden resigns as leader, we must pledge his successor to form no other alliance with the anti-British Nationalists of Quebec.

PRESENT PEACE IMPOSSIBLE.

We need not be surprised that the extreme radical elements of Russia, failed to make wise use of the new liberties, that from inexperience of the blessings of liberty they do not know how to make use. But we have reason in one way to be surprised that the Socialist elements in a country like Great Britain, where the benefits of freedom, have been enjoyed for centuries, should make such peace proposals as they are credited with doing.

These Socialist "cranks," for they are little else, have concocted a programme to put an end to the war. It is claimed that all the fighting nations were responsible for the war, and all should become responsible for paying the damages. There must be, they demand, no annexations nor indemnities. Germany must have her lost colonies restored, and even the people of Mesopotamia must be returned to the tender mercies of the Turk. There must be no indemnities exacted and no annexations of—even stolen—territory. The people of India, Egypt, Algiers, must be left to rule themselves, and a lot of other absurdities, not more absurd than other peace proposals that are founded upon anything but the complete destruction of the military power of Germany, whose insane ambition for conquest and domination, whose brutal aggression is solely responsible for the world waste, agony and destruction of this war.

Such absurd proposals for peace, or less absurd proposals that fall short of a peace founded upon the victory of freedom, right and justice, and the destruction of militarism and despotism, are not worthy or possible of discussion. Any peace made now would make vain and fruitless the tremendous outpouring of blood, the colossal waste of treasure, and make a similar war in the near future a certainty; for with Germany's militarism uncrushed; with her power of outrage left, and with her will to outrage and despotic domination unbroken, a presently patched peace would be a mockery.

Thank heaven, all these peace proposals, if they are not inspired by Germany, represent the desire of Germany to save something from the wreck her villainy has brought about her ears. Germany and Austria and Turkey are suggesting if not sueing for peace because they realize what this war now treading to its end, if it is fought out to its inevitable end, will mean to them — disaster and ruin.

If we want to see the war end right we must do our share in fighting—with men, with money, and with all our resources.

THE PEOPLE'S GOOD THE SUPREME LAW.

Hon. Mr. Hanna, food controller, in an address in Toronto, said that in reference to the law of supply and demand, he could not arbitrarily fix prices for food stuffs. In this he talks economic sense, but patriotic nonsense. The Mail and Empire, with an unusual forgetfulness of the claims of partisanship, and a sound appreciation of the supremacy of considerations of national interests, confronts and confounds Mr. Hanna's special and specious pleading in a way that is worth reproducing. It says:

"In his address at the luncheon of the directors of the Canadian National Exhibition Hon. W. J. Hanna, food controller, is understood to have said that it is impossible to fix the price of any commodity in disregard of the law of supply and demand. On that point the food profiteers could, but will not, respectfully take issue with him. They are not boastful of their achievement, but the fact is that they have fixed prices in defiance of the economic law whose fiat Mr. Hanna treats with such respect. When eggs were selling at a dollar a dozen, bacon at 50 cents a pound, the large loaf at 24 cents, and other necessaries of life at corresponding rates, our people paid the price, not altogether like unmurmuring fatalists feeling themselves in the grip of the law of supply and demand, but like travellers confronted with the blunderbuss of the highwayman. The modern gentlemen of the road hold up the law of supply and demand and everything else by turning into offensive weapons the very economies science has forged for the benefit of the people. Grain elevators of great capacity and perfect equipment, cold storage plants of the most finished type, banking facilities of the highest efficiency, are being used by forestallers and regraters to wring exorbitant profits out of the people. The power of the State is, however, a thousand times greater than the power of the most perfectly organized and heartless of the best engineered and best-financed group of profiteers. All that is needed is that the power of the State be directed upon the works of the domestic enemy. The enemy must be fought with the same courage and endurance as the foreign enemy. For that service officials of ability and resolution are required. They must not be daunted by any superstitious regard for what is known as the law of supply and demand, which the profiteers have so successfully bearded. The State has interfered to get the public a square deal from the railways. It regulates their rates through the Board of Railway Commissioners, and when the railways fail in their service to the public the government takes possession of them. And the State can equitably regulate and dictate the prices of the necessaries of life, and thereby render a hundredfold greater benefit to the people than by nationalizing railways.

According to the reasonable contention of the Mail and Empire, the extortion of the food profiteers—cold storage and otherwise—is subject to the supreme law, the good of the people. They have disregarded the law of supply and demand or diabolically so engineered and bedevilled it, as to convert it into a medium of extortion. They have outlawed themselves, and deserve only the consideration their action and practice call for.

Hon. Mr. Hanna, as food controller, if he has a free hand and is not under the awe of the government's guardianship of the "big interests," does not appreciate the solemnity of his position as food controller, whose first duty is to the people. His absurd decree, forbidding the use of wheat for distilling whisky, when virtually no wheat is used for that purpose; his decree against the use of canned goods, though theoretically admirable, is helping the drift of these articles to the cold storage houses. Whether or not his action was in the interests of the "big interests," it practically had that effect, and was therefore correspondingly in opposition to the interest of the consumer.

Hon. Mr. Hanna and the government that appointed him, must remember that we are in a time of war—when the whole heart of the people is in its successful prosecution. They are called upon to make, and do make, sufficient voluntary sacrifice for effective purposes to be spared subjection to enforced sacrifices by those interests or agencies that grab great gain at the expense of the people and at the expense of their capacity of rendering the full measure of service to help win the war.

Mr. Hanna and the government must remember that we are in a struggle whose every consideration is subordinate to that of giving war help—the politicians, the profiteers, the Shylocks of food supply, and even the fate of governments, as concessions of partizanship, are secondary. The Mail and Empire, in speaking as it has done above, in palpably plain terms of condemnation of deference to special interests, is animated by the new spirit the war and its needs, and the sense of national duty springing therefrom, have created.

Borden resigning in favour of Foster, suggests the idea that if the Kaiser should abdicate in favour of the Crown Prince, there would be no gain, the same "outfit," militarists and junkers, and other "big interests," would be behind the new men.

PIRATES MAKE GIANTS FIGHT.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.— New York played an uphill game against Pittsburg here to-day, winning out in the ninth inning by a score of 6 to 5. Miller, who pitched sensational ball in the early innings, weakened towards the finish, the Giants pounding him hard in the last four innings. He was taken out in the ninth after Sallee and Burns opened with singles. Steele then relieved Miller, and Smith, running for Sallee, scored the winning run on Robertson's sacrifice fly. Score: R.H.E.

At Philadelphia.—St. Louis hit Alexander's delivery hard in the last three innings to-day and defeated Philadelphia 5 to 3. All of the home team's runs were made off Meadows, who, with Baird, was sent off the field in the sixth inning for kicking at O'Day's decisions. Watson, who took Meadows' place, was very effective. At Brooklyn.— Brooklyn won the last game from Chicago to-day by a score of 2 to 1. It was Brooklyn's second winning in three days, and the only time it has taken a series from Chicago.

Hendrix was wild, but was effective in the pinches until the eighth, when Hickman walked and scored on hits by O'Rourke and Miller. In the ninth Daubert walked, took third on Myer's single to left and scored on M. Wheat's sacrifice fly. Chicago scored in the first on Wolter's single, Daubert's error, and a steal of third by Wolter, and Miller's wild throw. Score: R.H.E.

In the second game the visitors began an assault upon Benz, who was taken out with men on second and third and one out. Danforth retired the side, and retired the side in one-two-three order in each inning except one, when his own wild throw to first enabled Sloan to reach third. The scores:

JOHN J. McGRAW IS FINED $1,000

Manager of Giants Censured and Reprimanded by the National League.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—John J. McGraw, manager of the New York Baseball Club, was to-day fined $1,000, censured and reprimanded by the board of directors of the National League for approving an interview, subsequently published, containing an attack upon John K. Tener, president of the league.

This action was taken as the result of the demand for an investigation of the case by the New York Chapter of the Baseball Writers' Association of America, after McGraw had signed a statement repudiating the interview when brought before the league upon charges filed by President Tener.

The finding of the board, as announced after to-day's session, states that witnesses in the room with McGraw at the time of the alleged interview did not hear the remarks attributed to him. McGraw is held responsible, however, upon the grounds that he authorized and endorsed statements contained in the interview when he accepted the original manuscript for his approval and returned it with the remark that it was "all right."

The meeting, which was in session for over five hours, was attended by Presidents, P. D. Haughton, Boston Club; Barney Dreyfus, Pittsburg Club; C. H. Ebbets, Brooklyn Club; Branch Rickey, St. Louis Club. W. F. Baker, Philadelphia Club, and H. N. Hempstead, New York Club. The latter did not vote, as his club was involved.

A lengthy resume of the case, with a report of the findings of the board, was immediately sent to the Baseball Writers' Association.

CHOOSING HIS SUIT

The Squire Would Not Look at the Modern Method

In the English classics one reads of the old squire who had suits which he grew fonder of from year to year. Those were in the after-war days of the Nineteenth Century, when public opinion decreed that styles should not be changeable or fashions flitting. A good suit of clothes was possible then and is possible now.

The Squire would visit London once a year to replenish his wardrobe. What he bought was good, and he paid many guineas to his tailor. He was too old to admit that there was a new and better way.

In the long run a good suit of clothes is the cheaper. In Semi-ready Tailoring this year are suitings at $40, $45, $50 and even $60. They are the finest weaves of pure Botany wool, super-finely tailored some with pure silk linings—and they give the wearer years of beautiful satisfaction. This kind of Semi-ready suit, in pattern and material, can be seen in only half-a-dozen retail tailor shops in all Canada. Most tailors think them too expensive. Those tailors showing them charge from $65 to $85 for them because they are exclusive and pure.

From $21 to $80 the Semi-ready Special Order Service offers a range of patterns from half-a-million dollars' worth of imported British woollens.

AGAIN SEEK GOLDEN HORN.

Russia's War Aims Changing, Avers German Paper.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 29. — The semi-official Nord Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung attacks Premier Kerensky for his his remarks in reference to offers of a separate peace made before the Moscow conference on Sunday. The newspaper says:

"Premier Kerensky falsely attributed to us without proof efforts toward and offers of a separate peace. What Germany can do to pave the way to peace already has been done, but from Russia, where the peace movement originated, the echo came back dictated by Lloyd George, Poincare and President Wilson, destroying all the efforts of the Russian democracy.

"It is reported, moreover, that the revolutionary Russian Government again is fixing its mind on the possession of Constantinople."

$860.63 CONTRIBUTED TO THE LOCAL HEALTH ASSOCIATION

Proceeds From the Greater Peterboro' Association's Celebration of Dominion Day---Other Reports Last Night.

A FINE CONTRIBUTION

Through its Committee on Public Holidays and Sports, the Greater Peterborough Association contributed to the Health Association $860.63, the net proceeds from the Dominion Day celebration of Dominion Day on July material assistance it will remember one of this city's most deserving organizations, is by no means the least laudable of the Greater Peterborough Association's accomplishments in the first six months of its existence. Incidentally, Mr. R. Denne's committee has more than fulfilled its promises and it is sincerely to be hoped that this first success will not be a solitary one. The report of the committee was presented at last night's meeting as follows:

Peterborough, Aug. 29th, 1917.

Gentlemen,— Your committee on Public Holidays and Sports beg leave to report as follows:

As authorized by you, your committee arranged for and carried out a ceelbration of Dominion Day on July 2nd last. In doing so we had the assistance of the Peterborough Health Association, and the proceeds of the day were given to that Association towards carrying on its benevolent work in the city.

In the afternoon the programme included an automobile parade, in which the veterans of the Great War were taken to the Exhibition grounds. At these grounds a varied and interesting programme of sports was carried out, including horse races and athletic events.

The celebration, we are pleased to report, was very successful, the attendance being large and the entertainment provided interesting and satisfactory.

A feature of the celebration was the recognition of the soldiers and their families, and all soldiers and the members of the families of soldiers were admitted free to the grounds. In view of this the City Council contributed $100.00 towards the expenses of the celebration.

The financial result of the celebration was the contribution of $860.63 to the funds of the Health Association.

One of the requirements of the city, we believe, is suitable grounds permanently established for holding such celebrations as this one, with adequate grand stand accommodation and other requisites. We recommend that the City Council be asked to consider the purchase by the city of grounds to be used for such purposes.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

ROLAND DENNE,
Chairman.

Other Reports.

Mr. G. O. Cameron reviewed the activities of the Industrial and Labour committee, referring particularly to its interests in technical education. In a recent eastern trip, Mr. W. R. Breyfogle, chairman of the committee, had learned that Three Rivers, Que., has a $200,000 technical school which is not only proving a great help to the youths of that city, but is also helping to provide the industries with competent employees. In Halifax a technical school is even teaching deep sea fishing.

Mr. W. C. Ackerman and Mr. Jos. Begley endorsed the proposal of a technical school for Peterborough. The latter stated that many so-called mechanics to-day are little more than labourers. They haven't the necessary training and lack the knowledge to promote their progress. The technical school teaches the rudiments better than do the big shops. In fact the best mechanics to-day are graduates of small shops, Mr. Begley said, due to the general training they acquire.

Mr. Campbell gave a very satisfactory report of the Transportation committee's work, showing an improved freight service obtained and other questions taken up. The Transportation committee has presented a good report at every general meeting of the Association.

The holiday season explained the absence of the chairmen of the other committees.

Mr. D. W. Dumble urged that preparations be made for the opening of the canal. He predicted that it would bring enormous traffic through Peterborough, hence as a forehanded move there should be the preliminary preparations of barges, their cost and many other details incidental to the opportunity the canal offers. The government should be forced to complete the last link as soon as possible. It could give millions to the shareholders of a railway. But the railways owned the country and apparently the government too.

On Mr. Dumbles suggestion it was decided to inquire into the cost of vessels and other mattery preliminary to the opening of the canal.

MILITARY NEWS

friends of the popular young major and citizens generally are pleased that Brig.-Gen. T. D. R. Hemming has made a splendid selection. Major Kidd left his home at Burritt's Rapids to go overseas as a subaltern of the 2nd Battalion. He was appointed aide-de-camp to Gen. Hemming on his return after being seriously wounded, and a few weeks ago given the position as casualties officer.

CAMP BORDEN, Aug. 28. — Authority has been granted for the formation of a reserve of officers of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces. The information was contained in a circular letter received at headquarters to-day from the Adjutant-General at Ottawa. The reserve will consist of officers who having served with credit in the C.E.F., cease or already have ceased to be employed therein.

Twenty Million Meals.

The Military Hospitals in Canada will serve twenty million meals a year. The penny pinching war time housewife staggers at the thought, but the figure measures only one phase of the vast problem before the Military Hospitals Commission in caring for convalescent soldiers.

Mr. S. A. Armstrong, director of the Commission, quoted the figure at Halifax the other day and pointed out that with 15,000 patients, necessitating a staff of 3,000, this figure for a year was very modest.

The commissary department is in charge of a skilled dietitian in each hospital, who is responsible not only for variety and food value in rations, but for economy in service. If a saving of only one cent a meal could be effected it would net the government $200,000 a year.

N.C.O.'s for Depot Battalion.

Officers commanding units are hereby notified that a number of non-commissioned officers are required for the permanent establishments of depot battalions, to be organized in Military District No. 3, for the purpose of training recruits for overseas. These N. C. O.'s must be physically fit, be willing to join the Canadian Expeditionary Force, be qualified and capable of instructing in infantry training. They must be available for overseas service, but may be retained in Canada on instructional duty. It is requested that all officers commanding units in Military District No. 3 will make enquiries in their commands and send the names of such N.C.O.'s as are available, to the General Staff Officer, Military District No. 3, with full particulars as to the age, qualifications and experience of the N.C.O. concerned. Applications will also be received by the General Staff Officer from officers commanding units of young men, under their commands, who are anxious to take a course of instruction at the School of Infantry, Barriefield Camp, with a view to qualifying as N.C.O.'s.

In all cases, however, the names forwarded to the G. S. O. must be recommended by the commanding officer concerned. Wherever possible commanding officers should personally interview applicants, in order to ensure that names recommended by them are of men who have the qualities necessary in a N. C. O., or instructor.

A letter from Brigadier-General Hemming to the Examiner states that it is desired to promulgate throughout the 3rd Military District, the fact that as there has been a sufficient number of successful candidates for admission to the Royal Military College for the year 1917, no applications by matriculants, for entrance to the College, can be considered.

SEE CHANGE ABOARD BRITISH WAR SHIPS

Wood no Longer Thrown Into Sea as Formerly on Beginning Action.

(From the London Daily Mail)

The navy changes fast, and even in the year since I last saw a British battleship at action stations many new developments have appeared. What these are it would be unwise to state. The nation may rest assured that the knowledge gained at Jutland has been thoroughly applied.

The wood is no longer—as in the early days of the war—hove overboard at the signal for action. Other methods of dealing with it have been devised, and it is, of course, reduced to a minimum.

The interior of a gun turret is very crowded; there is a fire-control station, with its team of quiet people sitting with telephone headpieces; there are the two enormous guns, each weighing 100 tons; there are the men at the various levers; there are the officers in command; and there are the three sight-setters and gun-layers, one by each gun and one in the centre of the turret between the immense breeches.

The breech of the gun is closed by a huge block of steel which screws into it. The mechanism is hydraulically worked and acts with surprising rapidity. When the order "Load" is given this block opens and swings back. As it does this from far below rises with a crash a cage with three compartments, containing the massive shell in one and two quarter-charges of cordite in each of the other two.

As the cage comes to rest a loading tray shoots into position opposite the breech, connecting it with the cage. Then a chain rammer of peculiar construction darts with a rattling noise like the firing of a machine gun, forcing first the shell and then the two sets for quarter-charges into the gun. This done, the tray vanishes, the cage drops, the breech-block swings to and locks, and in thirty seconds from the order "Load" the gun is ready to fire. Meantime it has been laid on the target.

MAJOR McKENZIE MAKES NEW ARMIES FROM OLD

Canadian Who Distinguished Himself by His System of Remedial Exercises in the British Army, to Survey the Military Hospital Commission's Work in Canada

Major R. Tait McKenzie, R.A.M.C., who has been appointed by the Military Hospitals Commission to make a survey of its institutions, with a view to developing physical therapy on extensive lines, returns to Canada, where he gained his first prominence as medical director of the physical training in McGill University, credited with one of the greatest works in the British army, the creation of 16 Command Depots in England where the incapacitated are cured through remedial exercise and physical therapy, new armies are made from old, and the margin of war wastage cut to the minimum.

Major McKenzie, as professor of physical therapy and director of physical training and sports in the University of Pennsylvania in the ten years before the war, made himself one of the foremost men in his line in America, and wrote a text book, "Exercise in Education and Medicine," which is used in the finest colleges and universities on the continent.

Models Athletes.

His work as a sculptor of athletic figures won him the King's Medal given by Gustavus V. of Sweden for distinguished service in sculpture at the Olympic games in 1912, and has fixed the ideals of physical perfection for thousands of young men in American, Canadian and English universities, as well as placed him as an artist of first rank.

Being a Canadian, the war was new when he asked for leave of 18 months from his duties at the university, and enlisted in the Army Medical Corps.

He was first attached to the Headquarters staff at Aldershot, and it was while he was inspecting Kitchener's Army and his eye marked the unfit men who might be raised to 100 per cent. efficiency with a little proper remedial work, that he conceived the idea of the Command Depots.

The First Command Depot.

Sir Arthur Keogh, D. G. M. S., reading his report, instructed him to take medical command of the first Command Depot at Heaton Park near Manchester, and during the first winter, that of 1915-16, he sent 1,200 men back into active service at the front from Heaton Park alone.

In July he was appointed to inspect the nine Command Depots then existing, and when he recently returned to America there were 80,000 men in the process of re-making in 16 Command Depots.

In addition to the thousands who have been returned to the front he prepared many for service on the lines of communication and for service at home.

He has now been asked to make a survey of the Canadian situation and organize the use of physical therapy in the Military Hospitals in the Dominion. He will make suggestions for the systematic training of masseurs and masseuses and also for medical men whose business it will be to put returned men into condition.

At Hart House in Toronto, where Dr. Edward A. Bott has already done brilliant work in physical re-education, restoring men crippled by injuries to physical fitness, he will go over the apparatus invented by Dr. Bott and his assistants, and have patterns made from them so that duplicates can be placed in all the hospitals throughout the country. He will also try to establish training courses at several centres, similar to the school for masseuses opened lately in Hart House, to supply the demand for such treatment.

Major McKenzie was born in Almonte, Ontario, and took both his Arts and Medical degrees at McGill.

MOONLIGHT EXCURSION A SUCCESS

Court Chemong I. O. F. Had Enjoyable Evening

The moonlight excursion held on Tuesday evening, under the auspices of Court Chemong 530, I.O.F., per steamer Geneva, proved to be very enjoyable and successful. Despite the threatening aspect of the weather a good crowd were soon aboard, which was further augmented at the Street Railway Wharf. Tucker's Orchestra furnished first-class music for the dancing, which was engaged in throughout the outward and return trips, and Mr. Frank Grady made an excellent floormaster, and favorable comments were heard of the graceful dancing. The ice cream and other refreshments supplied by Mr. W. Routley, were of excellent quality, and met a ready sale. On the return trip the light of the silvery moon added the missing link to make an ideal excursion, and requests were made that another one should be run, but owing to the lateness of the season the committee would make no promises at present, but later a series of concerts may be substituted.

The following were the committee in charge, to whom much credit is due for the arrangements: Companions Miss Eva Rhodehouse, Mrs. A. Bradshaw, Brothers W. G. McKee, J. W. Buyers, G. W. Powell, O. E. Grose, I. Houden, W. Brown and H. Thornton.

The committee wish to thank Captain Harris and his crew for their courtesy and kindness, and the people for their patronage.

HINDU DESERTER IS NAILED IN CAMPBELLFORD

With Mr. Develinn of Kingston, provincial police, he arrested the man on Friday morning and placed him in gaol. The Hindu was carefully searched and everything was taken from his pockets, but when Mr. Wright returned to the cell twenty minutes later he found his prisoner stretched on the floor with a gash cut in his throat and a small jackknife in his hand. Medical attention was immediately summoned and the would-be suicide brought back to consciousness. Where the knife had been concealed was a mystery to the chief, but the Hindu had managed to secret it about his person and on the first opportunity put a bad gash in his throat about three inches in length and rather deep. He recovered sufficiently, however, to be taken away on the afternoon train with the provincial police, who intended putting him in a hospital.

When the man recovered consciousness after the medical treatment he asked, "Who do?" but Chief Wright promptly told the Hindu "You do." He tried to strengthen his claim to innocence by kissing a Bible which was near at hand and exclaiming "No do." However, as the man was alone in a locked cell for only a few minutes and found with a knife in his own hand it did not require much detective work to know that the poor unfortunate was only trying to stretch the truth to save further trouble for himself.

The other deserters have not been located as yet, but they will no doubt be rounded up soon. When last heard of they were at Madoc Junction inquiring the distance to Belleville. They are dark complexioned men and will be easily recognized.

The Food Controller's Department Discusses Live Stock Embargo

The Educational Department of the Food Controller's Office issues the following:

Imperfectly informed critics are constantly advocating the imposition of an embargo upon the export of livestock from Canada to the United States. They explicitly state that Canada, particularly at this time, is the loser and that every pound of beef and other meats produced in this country should be retained here, the surplus being shipped directly overseas.

Plausible as this argument may seem at first blush, it falls completely to the ground when all the facts are considered. It is demonstrably based on partial and incomplete premises.

The ante-bellum economics of the question have now no bearing whatever on the subject. Canada is at war. The United States is supporting our cause with every available resource that a mighty nation can command. Wer. Canada ten times a loser in exporting livestock to the United States, an embargo would still be morally unjustifiable. This by the way.

However, Canada is not the loser in these international transactions. Let us briefly consider the facts of the case.

Suppose Canada to have placed an embargo on the export of livestock. Suppose, also, that the United States decided to retaliate. Could the United States retaliate? Consider our dependence upon our neighbour for coal, to take one important item alone. Ontario wholly, Quebec in part, Manitoba almost wholly and Saskatchewan in part, depend upon the United States for coal. Were shipments cut off, industrial activity would be paralysed, while winter would find the people almost destitute of fuel for domestic heating and other purposes.

This is only one side of the question. The outstanding fact is that Canada actually is the beneficiary under the present situation. We are receiving more meat from the United States than we are sending over there in the shape of live animals. Take beef. We sent last year 101,885 more animals than they sent us. But we received 1,556,807 pounds more of beef than we sent as beef. We imported 705 more live hogs than we shipped and 9,294 more sheep. We received 2,413,561 pounds of mutton over and above the quantity we sent from this side, while as for pork we are the beneficiaries to the extent of 79,340,729 pounds. Ham and bacon and cured meats show larger imports from the United States into Canada than from Canada into the United States by 13,630,191 pounds. Canned meats show surplus imports of 1,021,603 pounds. Other meats give a preponderance of 56,389,000 pounds coming this way, while we received over 4,500,000 pounds of lard and cottolene and sent back only 375 pounds.

Following is a table compiled from the Customs reports of the Dominion of Canada for the year ending March 31, 1917:

	Imports.	Exports.
Cattle	3,094 head	104,879 head
Beef	11,625,807 lbs.	10,039,593 lbs.

It should be noted that much of our exported beef is consigned to the United States for the express purpose of filling war contracts. Canada is not equipped for handling and preparing for market the beef that is produced in this country. "Stockers"—animals from one to 1 1-2 years old and weighing from 300 to 800 lbs.—are sent to the United States corn belt where they are fed for about 12 months before slaughtering "Feeders"—animals that carry more flesh—are kept for a shorter period after purchase. It is demonstrably cheaper to send the live stock to the regions of cheap fodder than to bring the fodder into Canada.

Similarly our imports of pork, of bacon and of ham are in part for shipment overseas. The enormous preponderance of pork imports over all exports is evidence of our present relations with the United States as regards supplies. This is further accentuated in the items of ham, bacon and other prepared and canned meats and foodstuffs.

	Imports.	Exports.
Canned, dressed and smoked meats	1,113,292 lbs.	91,679 lbs.
Lard	2,599,398 lbs.	375 lbs.
Cottolene	1,979,237 lbs.	.....

The vital commercial consideration then, that justifies this reciprocal trade is the fact that the United States consignees have every facility for preparing and marketing beef and by-products, whereas these facilities in Canada are extremely limited. Thus it comes about that Canada imports more meats and meat products from the United States than the United States receives from us.

It cannot be too strongly emphasized that Canada and the United States are fighting side by side in a war that concerns us even more than it does our neighbour. Even were all the live stock that we send to the United States a total loss, that loss would be well worth while if it helped the cause. But since, instead of losing, Canada is the gainer, an export embargo would be an extraordinary piece of folly.

It is sad but true that we have not yet achieved a full sense of our responsibilities. Selfishness still taints us as a nation and as individuals. Were we given one intimate glance of the sufferings and unspeakable horrors of the war, there would be infinitely less talk and more performance. Our hardships—inconveniences rather— are as nothing compared with those endured by the Mother Country and the Allied Nations in Europe.

Says Coal Trade Is In "Dumps" Over Fixing Of Prices

NEW YORK, Aug. 29—In an editorial review of the coal situation the Black Diamond says, editorially, that the efforts of men engaged in the coal industry to save the country from a coal famine have been discredited and ignored and that the outlook for the future is grave. The coal trade is described as "disheartened and confused by the character of political action."

The editorial continues:

"The coal industry has not been thrown into the dumps by the loss of prospective revenue. That was a fore gone conclusion some weeks ago. It has been influenced far more by the fact that the most conscientious efforts to help have been discredited and mocked by the officers of the government they have been trying to serve and by the press of the country they have been trying to save from the dangers of a coal famine.

Coal Operators Lose Heart.

"Added to this is the fact that the final representative of the nation has reached his decision without consulting one of them, or even extending to them any of the courtesies which are so cheap and so easy. Because of these various things the coal people have lost heart for the big and burdensome work which is ahead of them this winter. We have never seen a time when the industry was so devoid of enterprise.

"This comes at a time when the dangers of the nation have grown into alarming proportions. The labour situation is far from quiet, as nearly every State reports some trouble of more or less consequence. In addition, some of the Eastern railroads are, in midsummer, as badly congested as they were in midwinter last year.

"Embargoes and restrictions on the movements of cars are down more tightly now than has ever been the case in summer. And the supply of coal is moving through to destination at alarmingly slow rates. With their difficulties piling up on them, the operators are trying to work under the handicap of thorough discouragement. The promised result on the people is not pleasant to contemplate.

Price Means Net Loss.

"This week the President issued his proclamation fixing the war prices, which are about a dollar under the conference prices on the average. It is now said in some districts that the small mines will retire, leaving only the larger ones to carry the burden. Those larger mines have most of their output closed on contract. Other districts cannot operate for long under the new prices, since they, with the undisturbed contracts, net the operators a loss.

"All of these things considered the prospect is not pleasing, and, in fact, the outlook is gloomy. The situation is complicated by the appeal which came from Russia this week. It needs locomotives and admits America alone can supply them. At the same time, the only cure for the coal shortage in America is more engines. The government will have to decide whether it will save Russia or end the coal shortage at home."

OIL STOVE EXPLODES.

Two Houses on Terrace Hill, Brantford, Destroyed as a Result.

Brantford, August 29.—The explosion of an oil stove is blamed for the burning of two houses in the Terrace Hill district. When the firemen arrived several buildings were ablaze, but with the exception of two houses all were saved. The houses burned were owned by R. Brigham and S. W. Vansickle, and the fire originated in the former's house. The damage will amount to about $6,000. As the houses were just outside the city limits chemicals and a bucket brigade had to be utilised. Chief Lewis suffered a strained back through a fall from a ladder.

"Le Canada" On Conscription

MONTREAL, Aug. 30.— Le Canada says this morning commenting on conscription: 'For motives from which we have torn the veil, with an object that we have shown hidden under the cloak of a superficial patriotism, the Borden government has refused to consult the people. The Government has gone beyond itself. It has a complete responsibility, the gravity of which we pointed out. Let it bear then the heavy responsibility of its evil work and the possible consequences before the Canadian people."

MUSIC IN THE HOME

TWO—PIANO PLAYING SHOULD NOT BE A NOVELTY.

But an Incentive to Piano Practice. It is Claimed that it Outclasses the Duet. Yet the Duet should be given every Encouragement.

When a fellow is starting out on a fishing trip, his interest in easily kept up while he is spending his noon hours buying lines and hooks and flies. He is enthusiastic as long as there is the looking up of railway time-tables. And even when he reaches the lake, the first few days the change is crammed full of enjoyment. But when the fish refuse all bait, when he sits in the boat hour after hour, day after day without so much as a nibble he is either a right good fisherman, or he will need some incentive to keep at it.

The same thing is true in music. A boy or girl commences piano lessons. He or she makes good progress for many months, but there comes a time when after gaining some proficiency, the temptation comes to ease off or quit. Other forms of pleasure call more loudly. Then that boy or girl requires a new incentive. One is suggested by Mrs. Burton Chance in a recent article in the Etude, from which is made this short extract which is worthy of consideration:

"In music, there is no incentive so keen, so prompt, so life-giving as two-piano playing. Indeed as a means of pumping quality in to the dead work of the average piano student, of absolutely waking up his inertia and setting a new desire tingling through his veins, there is nothing like it. Modern educators have simplified the whole subject of child-training by bringing it down to one thing—incentive. I cannot imagine a better investment for any parent who is discouraged, than just the simple one of renting a second piano for a few months every year.

"Have you ever thought that there is something narrow, limited, and almost one might say local about the early steps of piano study. Violin, 'cell, flute and voice all call for the companion spirit, which increases a thousandfold the joys of interpretation, even while the hill of difficulty still looms high. The piano is a particularly isolated instrument. So much of the work one must do alone. Like the harp and the organ it stands by itself and unless the child happens to be very gifted, what he gets out out of it in the beginning is very limited and his enthusiasm is rather apt to cool as time goes on and tempting fruit is seen to grow on other trees less deviously far away. To provide against this possible waning of enthusiasm give the piano student two-piano work. An absolutely new world will be opened up to him. Immediately the piano takes on the blessed bond of fellowship. At once there is a jaking up of his will, a new life-giving incentive and his whole emotional outlook changes. He begins to know for the first time the joys that should rightly belong to the one who studies music."

In the foregoing there is a great deal worth thinking over and one can readily see the merits of the case as presented by Mrs. Chance. In following up her argument, however, she makes this distinction between two-piano playing and the regular piano duet, which seems rather too much to the dispargement of the latter, for the playing of duets has proved an inestimable value in keeping up many a student's interest. The writer has in mind two boys who became quite proficient pianists. Neither of them was what you could call gifted, and there came a time when the call of baseball and outdoor sports became very very loud, especially at the practice hour. Then the teacher itroduced the duet playing and from that time on their progress was rapid. Practice was easier. Each one's responsibility for the success of the duet put him on his mettle. The results were most pleasing to their parents, friends and the music teacher.

While not agreeing with this part of Mrs. Chance's contention, her able presentation of the first part of the case warrants the quoting of the rest. She says: "But why is not the old familiar duet enough, someone may ask, why must there be always something new Cannot exactly the same result be obtained by systematic duet-playing The same result is simply not obtained, that is all. There is no spirit of advanture in duet-playing no keen edge of excitement, no difficulty to overcome, no vision. Sitting side by side at the same piano looking over at the other page when necessary, and by the aid of an occasional nudge ,is a very different matter indeed from a distinct solo on one instrument, which must in every way coincide with the solo some one else is playing on another instrument, each solo, though coinciding, a difficult and entire work. A single mistake of time or expression or repetition utterly confounds the whole when two pianos are used. It is therefore, one of the best of mental gymnastics. It helps the memory and increases the power of concentration, that power which is in so many of us fatally weak." This explanation to the contrary, the duet fills a great need on justification of defense.

Yet that does not alter the merits of the suggestion that two-piano playing can be made a powerful incentive of a greater and more intelligent study of piano music.

FIGHTING MEN WANT MUSIC

Soldiers Ask for Mouth Organs. Sailors Favour the Concertina.

Five thousand dollars worth of mouth organs have been sent to the trenches. No one can estimate the value of such a gift for maintaining the spirit of the soldiers under difficult, sometimes appalling conditions. The soldier with a musical ear soon learns this humble instrument and on a march it is invaluable. Usually the man-of-war's-man's insrument is the concertina. In the far-away times of peace the North Atlantic squadron came to the St. Lawrence every summer, and those who have visited Quebec in August have pleasant memories of long parades of shore-leave men headed by a blue-jacket playing music hall airs. Dufferin Terrace was the ideal spot for these informal promenades. Its quarter-mile length was delightful in the summer nights with the gay music and the singing sailors. The repertoire of the flagship band was always frivolous, but none the less pleasant. Even since the war Halifax had a taste of its quality. A German liner was being convoyed into port when the flagship band struck up with great spirit that classic inquiry "Who Were With You Last night?" One has no doubt that music has had a great influence in cheering the men both on sea and land who are defending the rights of humanity in this fearful struggle.

Music Translates Arguments, Dispels Doubts.

"All the orators in the city, though they exerted every ounce of their persuasive eloquence to move men's minds, could not accomplish as much for recruiting as the bandsmen of New York could, were they sent forth in full uniform to play martial airs in the streets," says the New York Sun editorially. "The men who can and will enlist, know the country's need and realize their obligations. They have thought for months of their duties and their capabilities. What they need now is the emotional appeal that will overpower the diffidence that shackles them and translate their half acknowledged purpose into a definite act.

"In the minds of thousands reason has done its part. They are ready to do their work ,to offer themselves in defence of their country and their fellow men. They need only that uplifting and inspiring realization music alone can furnish of the possibilities before them, to bring them to a decision. The martial tunes of the present and the past intensify every man's realization of the crisis in which we are all involved, and bring to his mind the debt he owes his fathers, his children and himself. Music is not a vain extravagance of war any more than it is a useless luxury of peace; it is the translator of arguments and the most potent solvent of doubts.

"Call out the music and its influence will hearten the backward and stimulate the hesitant. It will reveal the regular army to those who should join its ranks, and the great depression that has been imposed on us by a conspiracy to ingore the common impulses of mankind and to repress the ordinary emotions of the race will be lifted from us, at least for a moment."

FROZEN POULTRY

There Are Large Stocks in Storage in Canada Which Should Be Used

There is an article of diet of which there are large stocks in storage in Canada and for which there has been practically no demand. This commodity is frozen poultry.

This unusual situation this year has been caused through the shortage of ocean tonnage. A large part of the stock on hand had been sold for export but could not be transported owing to the unavailability of refrigerated space.

Canadian consumers, in the past, have not taken kindly to frozen meats. This has been due, in part at least, to lack of suitable facilities for defrosting, which if not properly done results in the meat being discolored and unattractive. The time has arrived, however, when it may be necessary for consumers to rely more and more upon frozen meat products. In times of scarcity every advantage should be taken of the facilities provided to carry over the surplus from one season to the shortage of another. Properly defrosted poultry, for instance, is equally as wholesome and nutritious as fresh-killed stock.

The public is invited, therefore, to ask for frozen poultry, of which there is a large supply consisting of chickens, broilers, ducks, geese, and turkeys. The trade advise that many of these varieties can be obtained at prices considerably lower than those prevailing for fresh-killed stock at present available.

It is given as a suggestion that frozen poultry could be utilised economically as a substitute for beef and bacon on Tuesdays and Fridays. If special poultry or frozen meat days were arranged and individual retailers had prospects of handling a certain quantity, they could order accordingly and all arrangements be made for the necessary defrosting. As there is practically no other market for frozen poultry at the present time, it would appear to be of distinct advantage to this country, in assisting to conserve its food products of other sorts, that poultry meat be utilised, insofar as possible, in the way suggested.

CLOSING EXERCISES OF CENTRAL PLAYGROUNDS

Visitors Astonished by the Work Done by the Children and Pleased With the Sportsmanlike Spirit Displayed in Games.

EXCELLENT RESULTS

The formal closing of the children's playgrounds at the Central School, yesterday, attracted a large number of friends and those interested in this splendid movement, which, since its inauguration, has proved such a blessing to both the little ones and tired parents who are on account of household duties, unable to devote a sufficient time to teaching the children how to play.

Exhibit of Fancy Work.

Miss Smith, the superintendent of the playgrounds, who has tirelessly instructed the little girls, and sometimes, little boys, to do cross-stitch embroidering, raffia baskets and generally utilize their otherwise idle moments in profitable and interesting work, was justly proud of the splendid exhibit of work done by the children, who ranged from 7 to 14 years. The visitors were keenly interested in the dainty baskets, mats, etc., they have made.

Sports in Afternoon.

After the distribution of free cones by Mrs. Morris and Mrs. McDiarmid to the large percentage of the 250 on the roll of the Central playgrounds, a happy and exciting afternoon was spent by the children in races and ball games. The prizes for these sports proved exceedingly attractive for entries to the sports, and consisted of more ice cream cones. It was a pretty well fagged out competitor who dropped out with the possible chance of a cone ahead.

Excellent Results Obtained.

Some of those who attended yesterday had been previously a little skeptical about the necessity for these play grounds, and had argued that the town was large, the parks free and water at hand and play easily learned without the expense of a professional to teach. These visitors admitted frankly yesterday that their ideas were entirely changed by seeing the remarkable sportsmanlike spirit displayed by the little ones who were ever ready to accept defeat in a sport, to play with the utmost unselfish spirit and to obey in a moment the laws of those in authority.

Swimming Curtailed.

And vastly more remains to be done. The little ones, now forming their ideas must be taught the nicer ideas of life. Without public swimming baths this is almost impossible, and now since the playgrounds are shut, the instructors gone, and the little ones still want to bathe, the problem is, how shall they when the bathing facilities are shut down by a short-sighted town.

After witnessing yesterday's display of the children banded together for clean sports it was impossible to leave without the firm conviction that the baths are a necessity for the rising generation.

DELUGED WITH BOILING OIL

Lindsay Man is the Victim of a Painful Accident

LINDSAY, Aug. 29.—Howard Chambers (better known as Nipper) had a narrow escape from serious injury or possible death Tuesday afternoon at the Asphaltic Concrete Plant when he was hit by a huge stream of boiling hot oil and fell (or jumped) a distance of fifteen feet.

He was working on an elevated platform tending the supply pipe, big as a hydrant, which supplies the hot crude oil to be mixed with asphalt and stone. The oil blew back and deluged him, striking him particularly on the right side of the face and head and on both arms from the shoulder to the wrist.

In his agony he leaped from the platform to the ground and sustained several cuts and bruises on this account. If he had not had the presence of mind to shut his right eye when he glimpsed the oil coming he would probably have lost its sight.

He was rushed at once to a doctor and although to-day unable to work is not confined to bed. Only last Saturday he got a bad gash over a foot long on his leg, but seems to be born under a lucky star.

Ball Lake Man Loses His Home

Mr. Thomas Tremain of Ball Lake suffered a serious loss on Monday by a fire that destroyed his house. He lived alone and that morning after breakfast left home to paddle across the lake to a cranberry marsh. Everything as he thought was left safe. When about a mile from home he looked back and to his consternation saw smoke issuing from his house in such volume as could only mean that fire had broken out. When he reached home the fire had made such progress that entrance by the door was impossible, but he secured entrance through a window, but before he could save anything the roof fell in and he would have perished had not a neighbour, who arrived opportunely succeeded in dragging him to safety. His eyebrows and moustache were singed, his arms, hands and back were severely burned. The building and contents are a total loss.

United States War Brevities

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Aug. 30.—On what was perhaps his first flight under the banner of the Lafayette flying squadron, Julian C. Biddle, youngest son of Mrs. Arthur Biddle, of the Crossways, Gwynedd Valley, was killed in the service two days ago.

Young Mr. Biddle completed his training course for the Lafayette Escadrill on August 3, a despatch from Paris stating he was on that date at the aviation reserve awaiting orders to get to the front.

An Atlantic Port.—Fifteen men of the American Ambulance Service in France have been killed within the past five weeks.

New York, Aug. 3.—The biggest military parade in Gotham since the Civil War featured the departure of the New York State troops to-day.

Camp Edge, Sea Girt, N.Y.—Anna Case, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Co., presented a Victrola to the Third New Jersey Infantry with more than a hundred records. The first record to be played was the "Star Spangled Banner," Miss Case accompanied the victrola, and the entire encampment, four thousand in number, joined in the chorus.

Washington.—Recruiting for the navy has resulted in bringing the total strength of that branch of the regular service up to 140,280.

New York.—William Sneed, fell dead in front of his home in New Brunswick, N. J., when told he had been drafted. Later it was discovered that the friend who told him had made a mistake and that Sneed's number had not been called.

The Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland, in exercise of the powers conferred on them by the defence of the realm regulations, have made an order, which came into operation on Saturday, July 21, prohibiting the exportation of horses from Ireland, save under special license.

a big vote to show that we are in favour of it."

Mr. Dumble moved, seconded by Mr. G. H. Logie the resolution formally declaring the Association's approval of the by-law.

The motion instructing Mr. S. R. Armstrong, secretary of the Association to prepare and have published the terms of the by-law that they might be impressed upon the minds of the ratepayers was moved by Mr. Gordon and seconded by Mr. Joseph Wearing.

The Harness Industry.

Mr. Armstrong corrected the impression that the company's harness business had been seriously reduced. This year's output is comparing favourably with that of last year which was but $1,000 less than in 1915, when large Government contracts were filled. Room for the boot factory would be provided in the present plant.

"We have tried several times to get shoe manufacturers to locate here," Mr. Armstrong continued, "but although they visited the city we never advanced negotiations to the by-law stage. The Ackerman Company's new industry will bring shoe machinery operations here. Mr. McKeen, who will be in charge of the work, is already here preparing to establish the industry as soon as the by-law is carried. Local workmen will have an opportunity of learning the business, others will be attracted here. The population will be increased, more persons will be employed thus benefitting the merchants, house owners and others."

Former By-Laws.

Mr. Armstrong remarked that in the past the city had offered new industries free sites and exemption from taxes. To the Ackerman Company's new industry there was neither free site nor exemption from taxes. The city's offer is a fixed assessment for ten years. In the first year the company promises to employ thirty hands. They will pay all their taxes as at present.

Port Hope's Offer.

Mr. G. O. Cameron, who has an extensive interest in Port Hope, stated that he had been informed of that town's efforts to attract the Ackerman Company. A building in which a munitions plant had been housed was now vacant. This was offered to the local company, together with inducements.

Mr. W. C. Ackerman admitted the Port Hope inducements, and of the inspection of the building, which was more than suitable. But there was no intention or desire of mentioning this fact for the purpose of influencing local ratepayers. The company was venturing into a new business and the assistance asked from the city was comparatively small.

Ward Organization.

The Association decided to adopt ward organization with the respective aldermen as chairmen. Meetings will be held at once and arrangements completed for getting out the vote next Thursday.

Among those present last night were Mayor Duffus, Aldermen Stratton and Dobbin, Rev. Dean McColl, Messrs. J. J. Turner, B. W. Hall, D. W. Dumble, Walter Stocker, G. O. Cameron, F. H. Dawson, W. C. Ackerman, F. W. Borbridge, G. H. Logie, R. M. Glover, F. W. McKeene, L. G. Myland, Joseph Bagley, G. N. Gordon, J. P. Lindsay, Geo. Schneider, W. S. Campbell, Joseph Wearing, R. L. Dobbin, J. E. Smith, S. R. Armstrong and others.

FOUR AND A HALF MILLION!

A Huge Army is Now Contemplated by the United States.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—The War Department is preparing plans for the training of 150,000 officers at reserve camps during the next year.

The General Staff estimates that one officer is required for every thirty men in the service, so the War Department preparations, based on that estimate, would indicate that the Government is laying the foundation for an army of 4,500,000, in addition to the 1,250,000 who have been called to the regular army, the militia and the national army.

Domestic Steel Should Be Helped By Munitions End

The outstanding feature this week is the official announcement that the production of munitions will be considerably reduced. For some time past there has been a steady reduction in output, but now a further restriction is advised. Such a situation was expected and an effort will doubtless be made by the firms affected to readjust their affairs to meet the new conditions. One beneficial result will be to increase the tonnage of steel available for domestic purposes and thereby help to relieve the shortage which has prevailed for some time. On account of the embargo on steel from the United States the situation has become serious, but hopes are entertained that some way out of the difficulty will be found. The matter is at present engaging the attention of the authorities at Ottawa and Washington. Prices of steel products continue stationary, but the market has a weaker tendency and some shading of prices is possible in the near future. A pronounced recession in prices, however, is not likely in the meantime. The pig-iron market continues firm at unchanged prices. Business is quiet as consumers are holding off pending developments in the price-fixing situation. The output of coke continues limited, owing to labour shortage, and prices are still high as a result. The nonferrous metal markets continue quiet and prices have a weaker tendency, copper and lead having declined. There is no change in the scrap metal market and prices continue stationary with a tendency to weakness. There is no change in the machine tool situation except that deliveries are getting more backward. There have been a number of advances in prices of machine shop supplies.—Canadian Machinery.

Port Hope Offers The Ackerman Co. Big Inducement

Mr. W. C. Ackerman and Mr. Borbridge were in Port Hope yesterday, at the invitation of the Mayor and Council of that town. Having received a courteous request to go to Port Hope to receive a proposition to locate their new shoe factory there, the above officers of the Ackerman Company felt the least they could do was to acknowledge the invitation by a personal visit.

Port Hope has several excellent available plants to offer, but there is this to be said about the town officials when they were advised of the details of the by-law that is to come before the electors of Peterborough next week, which they admitted was so favourable to the city as to guarantee its being carried without any doubt, they merely presented their claims for the factory in order that they might be first on the ground in case anything unforseen happened.

FORESTERS REDUCE THE SICK BENEFIT.

High Court Ancient Order Makes Other Important Changes in Laws.

BRANTFORD, Aug. 29.—The High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters, which is in session here this week with about 200 delegates in attendance, effected changes in the sick benefit payments. The rates of payment were formerly $4 a week to the sick during the first 52 weeks and $2 a week for the second year. In addition $100 was being paid at the death of a member and $50 on the death of a member's wife. The actuaries recently found that unless a change was effected the funds would be very badly depleted in the course of the next four or five years. After much consideration this morning a report was brought in which was unanimously adopted and will go into effect all over the Dominion on October 1, 1917. After that date the benefit from the sick fund will be $4 a week for the first 26 weeks and $3 a week for the remaining 26 weeks of the year. The payments on death of member or wife will remain the same, however.

PHILIPPINE TRIBESMEN ANXIOUS TO FIGHT FOR THE UNITED STATES

NEW YORK, Aug. 27.—Japanese newspapers which have reached here strongly urge the United States to send the Igorrotes to France to fight against the Germans side by side the American troops. They state that several of the wild tribes in the Philippines already have offered their services to Governor General Harrison.

The Far East is especially urgent in this matter. It says:

"Men of all colours and nationalities are fighting side by side in the great war and the latest volunteers are natives of a tropical territory that can supply a hundred thousand fighting men to the United States, if need be. In the Philippines are some of the most warlike tribes in the world, and based on information received directly at Manila, they are keen to offer themselves."

The Manila Times prints a statement from Judge James Ross, of the Colonial Administration, who has made an extended tour through Luzon, touring mountainous regions in the north. At every station where he stopped, natives asked for a chance to enlist in the great war. Judge Ross stated:

"Each native came in with his discharge papers, showing the length and quality of the service he has rendered to the government of the Philippines. Then, saying he had heard the United States was at war with Germany, he would urge his claim to bear arms under the American flag. The sturdy volunteer would be advised to rejoin the constabulary, in which many vacancies exist; but this did not satisfy. One and all wanted to fight."

In conclusion the Far East says:

"If, as some observers think, the war is going to test the man power of the United States, as did the civil war, Uncle Sam has rich resources in the Philippines that should not be overlooked."

Shortage Of Fuel in Russia Threatens Serious Crisis, Consul Reports

NEW YORK, Aug. 27.—Mr. David R. Macgowan, United States Consul at Moscow, Russia, sends to the Department of Commerce a report on the Russian fuel crisis. This became marked in 1916 and has grown acute this year. The consul says:

"It is aggravated by the deterioration of the railway locomotives, which causes them to require a constantly increasing share of the fuel available for industrial purposes. The railways and the navy now requires sixty per cent. and this proportion is expected to be increased steadily until the railways are bettered.

"In addition, 39,600,000 short tons of wood are required, according to the estimate of Professor K. V. Kirsch, who is serving the temporary government as a specialist in this field.

"A plan of campaign, production, transportation and distribution is worked out in some detail with respect to the close of navigation and other factors. As to wood for example, it is estimated that 500,000 labourers have to be organized, transported to the forest zone and fed and otrerwise cared for. Actually the wood chopping has to be done about a year ahead of the consumption, so that measures undertaken now would make themselves felt, as far as wood is concerned, mainly in the winter of 1918-1919. Until the present fuel survey less than the necessary thought has been taken to organize the equipment and the men needed to accomplish in war time what was done automatically in peace time.

"Assuming that all possible measures are taken at the proper time, the expert finds that there still remains a deficit of twenty per cent. of the country's total demands. Considering the necessity for providing the railways with fuel first of all, the conclusion is drawn that a third of the factory equipment of Russia must lie idle in the coming months, or, if all factories should share equally in the distribution of fuel, all would work only eight months of this year instead of twelve. The only means of mitigating the effects of the fuel famine, in the opinion of Professor Kirsch, is to organize a special fuel department at once and to endow it with all the powers of government."

East and South Ward Meetings On Friday Evening

The Ashburnham Ratepayers' Association will meet in St. Luke's Guild room on Friday evening to arrange the east ward plans for getting out the vote for the Ackerman Boot Company by-law.

The South Ward ratepayers will meet on the same evening in the committee room at the City Hall.

It is important that both these meetings be largely attended. Citizens of every walk have expressed their approval of this by-law, but it is essential that the vote should be a large one. The company is opening up a new industry, the future of which is as rich in promise to Peterborough as similar industries have realized in other Canadian cities. Naturally its beginning is comparatively modest, employing thirty hands in the first year, but the prospect of rapid development depends only upon the return to normal conditions. The concession the company seeks is so slight that only the narrowest and most unprogressive would object to it.

$1,200 Order For Coal Received By City From People To-day

Within a few hours this morning City Treasurer Adams received over forty-four orders for a total of 120 tons of coal worth $1,200. And the coal is on its way to Peterborough with the stage set for its premiere, and the machinery ready for its delivery to the citizens.

From this first flash of business the city's venture seems to have aroused the confidence of the people, and their orders may be interpreted as a desire to give the municipal fuel depot the support that should assure its success. Certainly the city has not held out any explicit inducement of profit, or of prices below the regular dealers. Hence, there is an element of appreciation, perhaps, in the large number of orders received this morning.

"Sammies" Are Great Spenders In Old London

LONDON.—London was overrun to-day with American soldiers and sailors. All the downtown streets in the city, especially in the Piccadilly district, were thronged with soldiers, some walking, some in taxicabs.

Everywhere the Americans mixed with the Tommies, Italians, Canadians and Scotchmen, and all agreed that London is fine and British hospitality superfine.

In some places the Britons were initiated into the game of craps, and, as usual, the beginners won. Craps seems to have captivated London. The Americans, who had not been at liberty since their departure from the United States, were lionized. At some corners women were standing, handing roses to the soldiers, who pinned them on their hats.

One thing noted was how Briton and American fraternized. Furloughed Belgians, Frenchmen or other soldiers of the Allies travel through the city in groups by themselves. Every American group was piloted by at least one and sometimes half a dozen Britons. All the landmarks were pointed out, and in many instances mixed groups walked through the streets with arms locked.

The American soldier is a mystery to the Englishman. Those in London to-day having just been paid, had pockets full of money, which they were anxious to spend. They dined at the best hotels, some of them occupying tables adjoining those at which British officers were seated. The only difficulty which they experienced with English money had to do with the value of the coins, to which they are as yet unaccustomed. They passed over pound notes in payment for small purchases and took back a handful of change without counting it.

"What's the use of counting it," said one. "We could count the number of coins, but that's all. So we just trust to luck.

From the tops of crowded buses men and women waved at the Americans. It is agreed unanimously that London likes them as much as they like London.

The American bluejackets had similar experiences, but many of them had been in London before and knew their way about.

EXEMPTION SETS PRECEDENT.

Owner of Montana Ranch Granted Immunity from Draft Until He Can Harvest Crop.

ROCHESTER, N.Y., Aug. 29.— The district draft board for Monroe, Wayne, Livingstone, Ontario and Seneca counties granted exemption to Fred S. Zoller, who contended an 800 acre ranch he owns in Montna requires his attention. Zoller said that upon the action of the district board depended his future course in agriculture. If left on the farm he would plant winter wheat. If drafted he said he would have to clear off the farm. The board exempted him until July 1, 1918, which will give him time to harvest the winter wheat. There are hundreds of farm youths who will ask for exemption on similar grounds, and the decision was regarded as a precedent.

BABY MORTALITY HIGH IN SMALLER CITIES

Report Shows Eleven Per Cent. Decrease in Deaths in Those of More Than 100,000.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29. — One baby out of every ten born dies before it is one year of age in the cities of the United States with a population of 25,000 and over, according to the infant mortality survey just completed by the New York Milk Committee, of No. 105 East Twenty-second street, covering 150 of the largest cities of the country— which represents one-fourth of the population.

The death rate among babies in cities of more than 100,000 population has been reduced eleven per cent. since 1910, the survey says, while the reduction in cities of from 50,000 to 100,000 is only two per cent., and those under 50,000 show an increase of five per cent.

The lowest infant death rate in 1916 among cities of 100,000 or over was in Portland, Ore., with only 55 baby deaths per 1,000 births, and the highest was Fall River, Mass., with a rate of 163.

Anti-Conscriptionist Is Held In Custody

Elie Lalumiere, Moving Spirit in the Constitutionalist, Falls Foul of the Authorities—No Further Anti-Conscription Parades Will Be Permitted By the Police.

MONTREAL, Aug. 31.—Elie Lalumiere, anti-conscription agitator and moving spirit in the constitutionalists, an organization formed to fight the military service act, appeared in the Practise Court this morning before Judge Monet, when an application for his discharge on a writ of habeas corpus was made.

Lalumiere, who is said to have been detained by the Dominion police in connection with the dynamiting of the country home of Lord Atholstan, proprietor of The Montreal Star, was conveyed from the immigration offices here, where he has been detained, in an automobile. He was in charge of five Federal officers.

Atain German, K.C., acting for Lalumiere, made the preliminary motion for the issue of a writ and Judge Monet adjourned the hearing of arguments until this afternoon.

Mr. German argued that Lalumiere has been illegally deprived of his liberty and that there has been no civil or criminal proceedings which justified such detention.

Lalumiere did not say a word in the court room. He stood nervously between his guards, wearing a flaming red tie, and beside the officers of the law looked very little more than a school boy. He was allowed to send money to his wife by his brother.

The police intimated this morning that they expect to receive orders to stop further parading through the streets by anti-conscriptionists. Nothing will be done to prevent orderly meetings of protest, but the window-smashing crusades in the English section of the city must stop. At a meeting to-night on the Champ de Mars the police will attempt to search for firearms those suspected of being dangerous characters.

Several Under Arrest.

Several arrests of anti-conscriptionists in connection with the dynamiting of the summer home of Lord Atholstan have been made here by the Dominion police and more are expected.

Reports say the police also have under arrest a young reporter and a soldier, who, it is asserted, concealed dynamite in an uninhabited house in the northern part of the city.

This morning St. Catharine street parade, during which the turbances and fight between police and anti-conscriptionists looked as if it had been struck by a cyclone. The windows of over a dozen big stores had been willfully smashed in and damage to the extent of several thousand dollars done.

At the anti-conscription meeting in St. Henri which preceded the street parde, during which the crowd clashed with the police, Paul Lafortune announced that some one had telephoned his mother to let her know that if he (Paul Lafortune) appeared at the anti-conscription meeting in Cartier Park he would be arrested and share the same fate as Lalumiere. This had not influenced him and would not influence him, he said.

Lafortune then made an impassioned speech against the conscription bill, but was careful to couch his language in a form that could not be literally interpreted as counselling resistance to the bill.

"They call us cowards and slackers because we do not go to the front to fight the Boches," he cried. "Well, let us prepare ourselves. Let us get ready to fight the Bosche. You know what Bosche I mean."

Eugene Lajeunesse excited the crowd greatly by advising them to organize into groups of fifty under an officer, so that they could oppose discipline of some kind to police who tried to make them enlist.

Drop In Hog Prices Feature Of Week

Manitoba Wheat Declined Twenty Cents Yesterday

TORONTO, Aug. 31. — During the week one of the biggest breaks yet recorded on the local live stock market occurred when hogs, quoted at the close of last week at $19.50, fed and watered, dropped to $17 quoted.

When the market opened on Monday traders were quite indifferent about buying, and for the first few hours mere sight-seeing was the order of the day. Packers refused to offer the least bit more than $17 per cwt. for hogs, and drovers were not at all inclined to sell for that figure. Prices in all the other sections, however, held just about firm.

During the middle of the week a large percentage of the offerings was common stock. The demand for this class of stuff, however, was found and sales were affected at the normal prices. Good butcher heifers, butcher cows and stockers and feeders were always in demand.

On Tuesday, calves and sheep had the most active demand and prices tended to soar higher than usual. Much of the supply sold at $15 and $15.50, but later in the week the best stock brought about 50 cents less on the hundredweight.

On the last two days of the market milkers and springers experienced somewhat of an unusually active demand, and all that were offered found buyers. There was a dearth of choice heads, however, and prices were not the best. The absence of choice cattle continued to the end of the week, shippers presumably preferring to wait until next Monday for possible better prices. Hogs gained strength as the week drew to an end, and on Thursday packers were offering $17.25 for the animals, fed and watered. All that were offered were sold, but the demand cannot be said to be very brisk, despite the long drop in the price of this stock.

Montreal Mob Fights Police

Four Constables Injured and Civilian Shot in Anti-Conscription Riot

MONTREAL, Aug. 31.—Four policemen were injured, one man was shot through the left arm, and a score or more received cuts and bruises, and windows in half a dozen establishments were smashed last night when the police and anti-conscriptionist paraders clashed. The trouble started at Phillips Square, Deputy Chief Grandchamps giving a command to disperse the parade. The police charged, and the antis broke and fled in various directions. Some of them, however, made a stand, and stones were thrown and some revolver shots were heard, but the police used their batons and won out. Part of the crowd went down Beaver Hall Hill, followed by a score of policemen, who were under the impression an attack was going to be made on the Gazette and Star offices, but the rioters dispersed when they realized the situation.

The casualties included the following: Police Lieut. Corcoran, struck in the stomach with stone. Constable Bruce, hit on the head and back with stones; Constable Beriau, left knee cap sprained in fall, removed in an ambulance, first to the General Hospital, then to his home; Constable Gravel, struck in the face with a stone; Donat Lacasse, 154 Aylwin street, and his brother, Samue, 205 Aylwin street, taken to the General Hospital, Donat suffering from a bullet wound in the left forearm, and his brother suffering from a cut head. When Lacasse was shot he was running away from the police, and it is not known who shot him. The wound is not serious.

With cries in French of "Down with conscription," the rioters smashed shop windows, street car windows, etc., on Atwater avenue and St. Catherine street prior to their appearance on Phillips Square, and they were exceedingly noisy before the police took a hand in the affair.

Le Devoir, Henri Bourassa's paper, announced last evening that M. Elie Lalumiese, president of the League of Constitutionalists, and one of the prominent anti-conscriptionist orators, was arrested last night and mysteriously kept a prisoner in some place unknown to his wife or friends, and that Lalumiere telephoned to his wife at noon yesterday stating that he was in a place which he could not name because he was in danger of being killed. At a gathering of about six thousand men and boys in Sir George Etienne Cartier Square last night, Wilfrid Lalumiere, a brother of Elie's excited the crowd by telling that his brother was under arrest, and he would be willing to lead an assault on whatever jail held his brother, if he could learn what jail it is. Other speakers referred to the mysterious disappearance of Elie Lalumiere, and they intimated that something hot would be said about the matter at a meeting on the Champ de Mars to-ight.

The crowd showed an ugly mood at one period of the meeting, when a speaker said he had received word from Quebec that a battle was going on at Valcartier between French-Canadian and English soldiers, and that American soldiers were fighting alongside the French-Canadians. Revolvers appeared in fifty places, and reports from blank cartridges prevented the speaking being heard for a few minutes. The firing of blank cartridges was kept up intermittently during the remainder of the meeting. Adrien Lachaine, the chairman, said he prefererd a genral strike to revolution.

New Drug Acts on Every Organ of Body

Makes Your Checks Rosy.

A pale face, sallow complexion, weak stomach, clogged liver, painful kidneys, catarrh affections, rheumatic pain, run-down and anemic conditions of the whole system are caused from an impure, thin and watery condition of the blood. All these organs of the body are directly dependant on the blood for their source of strength. After each meal and at bedtime take from two to three of these tablets with a little water. You will note that you will get results after the first few doses the iron acts immediately upon the blood while the phosphorus goes direct to the spine, the center of the nervous system.

As soon as you get the blood purified and the nerves soothed, the stomach, liver and kidneys begin to do their work and in 5 to 10 days you will be 100 per cent. stronger. Your blood pressure will be increased, making your cheeks rosy and you once more have that vigorous, vivacious, keen, bright, alert feeling of boyhood days. The new drug is dispensed by F. O. "MOUNTAIN MADNESS"

By Anna Alice Chapin

"Will you please forgive me," she said, in those same warm tones so hard to resent, "but did you come all this way to give Miss Forsythe that glove?"

Polly turned on her. They were almost of a height and size, and far more nearly of the same temperament than Enid.

"Of course, I didn't!" she flashed. "Do I look like a fool?"

Again Alice Baker laughed, this time delightedly.

"You bet you don't," she retorted, with characteristic slanginess. "You look stunning!"

Polly had never looked so lovely. A rough dark cloak was about her and above it her face was exquisite, tragic and beautiful in its appeal. With a simple dignity that recognized and met the situation she went toward Enid.

"Martin Hale is in danger," she said quietly, but with just a catch between her words now and then. "It was partly that that brought me. But," she looked from Enid to Alice with great appealing eyes, "I don't reckon he's in much danger now. It was—something else."

Neither answered, knowing that she would go on. She did, breathlessly.

"All my life I've wanted the things that you-all are born to. I've wanted fine clothes—and I can wear 'em, too! I've wanted a place—a great bright place to be glad in. I——" She stumbled over the words. "I want to go to that ball to-night if I die to-morrow."

No one stirred for an instant and the mountain girl clasped her hands tensely.

"I know," she said restlessly, "that I sound wild, but— Oh, you don't know—you can't know how I've wanted—how I've dreamed of something like that! I know I belong to another world from you-all——"

She hesitated, looking from one to the other of them piteously. Enid could not answer, did not know how to. It was Alice who put in swiftly and with honest force:

"I should rather say you did belong to another world—a much nicer one than ours, my dear girl!"

Enid hesitated, half puzzled, but Alice Baker made a quick movement forward, and flung her arms around Polly.

"Don't you see," cried Alice, "she must have her chance! She must go to the ball!"

PETERBOROUGH, ONTARIO

Polly's eyes were like big dark stars.

"You do understand!" she gasped, amazed.

"Of course, we understand!" Alice Baker exclaimed and the whirlwind of her response swept Enid along with it. "You're a splendid thing, child, and you are going to be the 'Queen of Hearts.' You were meant to be—for to-night, anyway. Isn't she, Enid?"

Enid nodded, deeply flushed. There was a terible sense of guilt on the part of both herself and the mountain girl. Each had tampered with the other's legitimate lover; they could hardly meet each other's eyes.

"Come on," said Alice briskly. "We must dress her up. My clothes will be just the thing. You are built something like me, child—only infinitely better!"

There was a great business getting Polly into Alice Baker's things. Alice was the only one who was wholly jubilant. Enid was too engrossed in her own problems and Polly too terrified and thrilled by the present triumphant situation to experience an unalloyed joy. But Alice was minded to take advantage of this unexpected yet fortuitous happening to steal a little extra time with Ralph Denby, unknown to anyone. Hence did she enthusiastically deck Polly out in her own raiment, executing small steps of exultation behind the backs of every one except Enid's maid, who was a wise soul, and saw through her, yet contrived to remain discreet.

Alice's dress was of a deep rose-red which suited Polly's loveliness quite as well as her own. After she had been hurried into it—the hooks straining a bit because of her fuller and more natural development, the other women gaped at her until she blushed.

"But later?" suggested Enid. "You know lots of us have a color at the beginning of the evening; it's the excitement, but later——"

"For her——" began Miss Baker. Polly's rich tones swept in ahead of what she would have said.

"For me," she said, "it will be all excitement. And—the color will last."

The French maid murmured something that sounded like "vous crois bien," but they were all too keyed up to count their own or each other's words.

"But what are you to wear?" Polly remembered to ask.

"Never you worry about me!" declared Miss Baker with a splendid pirouette. She had, as has been mentioned, her own plans.

When the maid tucked a big towel about Polly's superb shoulders, and started to apply cornstarch. "No!" exclaimed Polly suddenly. "I don't want the powder.

"Why not?" demanded Miss Baker in astonishment.

"I don't know why," said the hill girl, rather awkwardly, "only—it just doesn't go with me."

Alice surveyed her critically. "You are right," she said, after a moment or two. "It doesn't. My dear child, I think that you are an amazing egotist. You know so jolly well that you can't approve of—yourself."

Polly was not listening to the words but she recognized the tone as not unkindly. The crimson in her cheeks came and went and she looked at herself in a glass with a shy interest in her lovely eyes.

Enid was already dressed. She had accomplished it subtly, hastily. She had not powdered her hair, but otherwise she was ready for conquest in pale blue. The thought had come to her that she would like to see Jack Radnor before Polly appeared before him in that amazing and conquering glory. She was ashamed of the petty jealousy, but—there it was. Having a suite of several rooms, she slipped out unnoticed, while the maid was dressing Polly's hair and Alice was cutting bits of black court plaster for the final touches.

"There!" Enid heard Alice say, as she slipped away, "this bit close to your mouth, and this under one eye, and this on your neck——"

A primitive jealousy blazed in Enid as she went quietly out. Her neck! Of course the girl's neck was splendid, but——"

She went brazenly down the hotel corridor to do what she had never done in all her well-ordered life, to see a man in his rooms. Radnor's quarters were on the same floor—a rather pretentious suite where she and her mother had had tea once or twice. At that hour she would be almost sure to be alone. Her heart pounded, but she stole on, hushing the swish of her silken skirts.

She met nobody on her way and stopped, trembling at the parlour door. With a trembling hand she tried it—she was afraid to knock, and in a second it was ajar. She wondered if he were dressing and if she need be afraid of his man. Then she stood transfixed. For inside came Ralph Denby's voice, clear and unmistakable: "We'll get him to-night." Jack's followed: "I'm sorry you've got it in for Hale, Ralph. I think he's a decent fellow."

"He's in with the bunch. He'll go to jail if Dad and I can do it."

Enid was a modern girl but she had nerves—nerves keenly strung up to-night. She gasped faintly, but, as it happened, audibly.

Before she could get away from the door it had been flung open. As she confronted Jack Radnor a sort of joy touched her. She loved him so, in spite of her vagaries! She moved instinctively toward him, and his response was as eager as she could have wished.

"Enid. Was there anything you need me for? Is everything all right, dear?"

If Ralph Denby and the valet had not been there she might have thrown herself into his arms, asked him to admire her dress, confessed her jealousy of Polly—who knows what? As it was she cast wildly about in her mind for a good excuse for her highly unconventional presence. Then moved partly by that discretionary and self-protective impulse, and more by a sincere anxiety, she cried:

"Is Martin Hale really in danger?"

Jack Radnor's face hardened to stone—or rather to bronze, since that was his coloring. His brown eyes sharpened and chilled until all the warm golden light had gone out of them. He drew away and looked at Enid as though she had been something less than a stranger.

"He is most decidedly in danger," he said. Then a passing glitter leaped into the brown eyes. "So that is why you are here!" he said.

Sick and cold and shaking, Enid turned from him blindly and fled along the corridor. To save her soul from torment she could not have explained—she could not have explained.

DEER BREAKS BOY'S RIBS.

Charges Croton Youth on Bicycle as He Passes Through Southfields.

CROTON, N. Y. — Anthony H. Barron, of Croton, suffered two broken ribs and other injuries when a buck deer plunged into a bicycle he was riding.

Barron was in Southfields on his way to visit his sister when the deer, emerging from a clump of bushes, plunged into his bicycle. It was completely wrecked. The deer, thrown to the road, regained its feet and bounded off. Barron also suffered a fracture of the nose. He was removed to his sister's home in Southfields.

John A. Morris, of Central Valley, north of Southfields, reported that deer are becoming so bold in Orange County that one entered his flower garden and efforts to shoot it away availed nothing. It finally was routed with a horsewhip.

THE MAKING OF FRUITS, JAMS, Etc.

In selecting berries or other fruits for jam, the ripe broken one will give fine colour and flavour, but at the same time should always be about one-half the quantity which are slightly under-ripe. These contain the peckin which gives a jelly-like consistency to the product. Cooking in small quantities also helps to retain colour and flavour as the fruit is cooked more quickly. Rapid cooking with constant care to prevent scorching is essential.

In common practice, equal weights of fruit and sugar are used. It has been found, however, that a better consistency and a more delicate and characteristic flavour is produced when less sugar is used. Three-fourths as much sugar by weight, as fruit, has been found sufficient to keep the fruit, when it is cooked to the proper concentration. The sugar acts as an antiseptic so that the fruit will keep without being sealed air-tight.

In stirring jam use a wooden spoon or paddle, moving it across the centre of the vessel first one way and then the opposite and next around the pan, gently moving the mixture from the bottom of the pan, being careful not to stir rapidly or beat. To test when the jam is cooked to the right consistency, cool a little in a spoon and allow it to drop. If it will not pour, but falls in a sheet or flake-like jelly, it is done. An easier way is to use a candy thermometer and cook the jam until it registers 200 degrees F.

Raspberry or strawberry jam—Four pounds raspberries or strawberries; 2 1-2 pounds sugar. Mash berries; add sugar; cook thirty minutes or until the desired consistency is obtained, stirring very often. Pour into glasses or jars and cover.

Black, red or white currant jam—Four pounds currants, 4 pounds sugar. Stem currants, crush slightly; add sugar, let stand over night. In the morning cook one half hour, stirring often. Turn into glasses and cover.

Green or ripe grape jam—Wash and stem grapes. Separate skins from pulp. Cook skins until tender and ress through a sieve. Cook pulps ten minutes and press through a sieve. Combine the two. Add one pound of sugar to every quart of fruit. Boil one-half hour, stirring often. Pour into glasses and cover.

Peach marmalade—5 pounds peaches cut into small pieces; 2 pounds sugar; 1 doz. whole allspice; a few cracked peach pits; 2 inches ginger root; 1 teaspoon whole cloves; 2 teaspoons cinnamon bark; 2 teaspoons sprig mace; 1 cup peach juice; (tie spices in cheesecloth bags). Cook all together until as thick as marmalade and clear, or until the mixture registers 220 degrees F when tested with a candy thermometer. Pack hot in hot jars and seal at once.

Ginger pears.—Use pears not quite ripe; peel, core, and cut into thin slices. To 8 pounds of pears allow 8 pounds of sugar, 1 cup of water, juice of 4 lemons. Cut the lemon rinds into thin strips and add them. Also add one-eighth pound of ginger root cut into pieces. Simmer until thick as marmalade. Pack.

Apple butter—Pare and core the apples. Boil in water until fruit is soft. Mush to a fine pulp. To each 25 pounds of apples add 2 ounces cinnamon, 1 ounce ground cloves, 1 ounce nutmeg, 6 pounds sugar. Cokk until thoroughly mixed and thickened.

Spiced grapes— 1 peck grapes; 3 pounds sugar; 1 pint vinegar; 1 teaspoon cloves; 1 teaspoon cinnamon; 1 teaspoon allspice. Pulp the grapes; boil for five minutes; strain to take out the seeds; put the skins and pulp together; add the other ingredients and cook until thick.

Spiced currants.—Four pounsd currants; 2 pounds brown sugar, 2 tablespoons cinnamon; 2 tablespoons cloves; 1 teaspoon salt; 1 cup vinegar. Remove stems and wash currants. Add remaining ingredients and boil twenty minutes. Keep in stone jar or glasses.

Spiced Peaches—Four pounds peaches; 3 pounds brown sugar, 1 cup vinegar; 1 tablespoon cloves; 1 tablespoon cinnamon; 1 tablespoon ginger; 1 teaspoon salt; 1-8 teaspoon cayenne pepper. Boil sugar and vinegar. Scald peaches. Remove skins, and cook in syrup. Tie spices in bag and cook with peaches. When peaches are tender pour into stone jars; re-heat syrup every day for a week, pouring, when boiling, over the peaches.

Spiced gooseberries — Four pints gooseberries; 3 pounds brown sugar; 1 cup vinegar; 2 pounds brown sugar; 1 cup vinegar; 1 teaspoon whole cloves; few sticks cinnamon; 1 teaspoon salt; 1-8 teaspoon cayenne; 1 tablespoon lemon juice; 1-2 ounce ginger root. Tie spices in a bag. Cook vinegar and sugar few minutes. Add spice and remaining ingredients and cook slowly 1 hour.

THE NEW DRAPERIES IN MID-SEASON FROCKS

Most of the Season's Fabrics Adapted to the Draped Styles

Long Sleeves and High Collars Returning

NEW YORK, Sept. 1—Draped styles are undoubtedly having their day now. Actually, you come across them here, there and everywhere, and at all times of the day, too, for the reason that there is hardly a fabric which does not lend itself well to this becoming style, whether it is the cotton voile or gingham for country wear, the satin or taffeta for afternoon calls, to say nothing of the chiffon and Georgette frocks which are, above all, most charming for summer evening parties. Those light-weight wool frocks of serge and wool jersey which should always be on hand for cool days are not too heavy either to be draped; in fact, they are very successful in this style. And so, you can simply suit yourself as to the material you should use for your draped dress, for a draped dress you must have, unless you are willing to admit frankly that you are not in the swim of fashion.

The new draperies take many forms, but the most popular is the kind illustrated here. Sometimes the material is draped about the hips, and at other times the drapery is placed very much lower. In skirts of this kind the width at the hem is narrower than usual so as to obtain the drawn-in appearance at the ankles. The width varies from about one and seven-eighths to two yards, making these skirts narrow enough to be smart yet not too scant for comfort in walking. There seems to be a tendency in most skirts toward the narrower effect at the hem, especially in the new tailored skirts.

The afternoon dress illustrated, above is of black satin, the skirt showing the new side drapery, and the waist, the tie-on style which goes exceptionally well with this type of skirt. Surplice lines always have a certain fascination and the waist in this style is especially modish now. The crossed ends either extend into sashes which are tied at the back, or they are cut off at the back and buttoned in the centre.

Long Sleeves and High Collars

New notes in sleeves are beginning to appear already, and especially worthy of notice is the new long, close-fitting sleeve which reminds us that the coming autumn season is beginning to cast its shadows before it. Sleeves made of transparent material, which we have had with us long, are beginning to give way to those made of the dress fabrics. While we still have the transparent sleeves, the dresses made of one material, sleeves and all, are appearing in greater numbers.

With long sleeves, higher collars are coming in. High collars with jabots of lace or net have been in vogue for some time, but the new high collars on dresses are not detachable as were those with the jabots. They are also of the dress fabric as is the case with the new sleeves. A very novel collar is made in crushed effect with ends crossing in front and buttoned to the dress, somewhat in muffler effect. These collars appear on cloth and silk dresses as well as on the new coats—another warning that we must soon begin to turn our thoughts to autumn styles.

A delicious salad can be made of asparagus and salmon laid on lettuce leaves chilled and served with mayonnaise.

The rounded neck-line is the newest.

Khaki Uniforms In Use Since 1857

What is the origin of khaki? To whom are we indebted for it?

It was first adopted in British India, in 1848, by Sir Harry Burnett Lumsden, who had been asked to equip a corps of guides to collect intelligence and to conduct an English force on the north-western frontier of India. The cloth used was a light cotton drill, as suited the climate of Hindustan, and took its name from a native term, "khaki" which means in the Urdu language, "dusty" being derived from "khak" or dust. Thus the term applied to the color of the cloth rather than to the material, says the Popular Science Monthly for September. Though the dictionary tells us it is pronounced kaykee by the natives, the English have given it to us as kharkee, and this is the correct pronunciation.

Having been approved, the use of the cloth spread from the guides to others in the Indian army, and it was worn in the Sepoy Mutiny in 1857 by the English troops. In the Boer War, 1899-1902, khaki was adopted in the British service for an active service uniform, and so worn by all English and colonial troops in Africa. But as cotton was not warm enough for the African highlanders, uniforms of the same kind were made of serge, and the term khaki thus included woollen as well as cotton fabrics. Because it was well fitted for the climate of India and the Phillippines, the United States chose khaki for the soldiers' uniform during the Spanish-American war.

TROUT FISHING IN THE LAURENTIAN LAKES

THERE is in Eastern Canada a region strewn with lakes where one can drop off the train and in three or four hours return with a "catch" (weighing 30 to 40 lbs.) of those finny mariners which are as game as the black bass and as beautiful as the rainbow. That region is the district which lies between St. Agathe and Nominingin the Laurentians, Province of Quebec; and its myriad lakes, and streams abound with grey and speckled trout, which, according to many experts with the rod, have no equal elsewhere for size, gameness and variations in color.

The total run north from Montreal to Nominingover the Canadian Pacific is only a six hour ride; or to put it in another way, starting at Montreal one reaches St. Agathe in 3½ hours, Labelle in 5 hours, and Nominingin 6 hours, while the distances from these and other stopping points to the adjacent or near-lying lakes and streams varies from one-eighth of a mile to four miles, except Nominingwhere the very remotest lake lies 12 miles distant from the Canadian Pacific line. Another important feature that makes this splendid trout-fishing region absolutely unique is that a score of lakes, and as many streams, are as yet totally unexplored; and there, as one expert with the rod and fly puts it, "the trout are wholly unsophisticated," which is another way of saying that they will rise and snap at a fly the moment they spot the gaudy counterfeit.

The most unique feature of this trout-fisher's paradise in the Laurentians is its infinite or endless variety. Do you want to have the best trout though not large in size, are "sporty" little fellows, which like to rise to the fly, and you can fill a creel in a very short time. In the same area are two other lakes, Levesque and week there will suffice. Next, entrain for St. Faustin, only 13 miles distant from St. Agathe. Drop off at St. Faustin, and an eighth of a mile away is Square Lake, where the trout fishing with fly or troll that this continent affords? Then drop off at St. Agathe and proceed to Lake Manitou where the speckled trout are specially plentiful and gamey. A miles away from the station, you can get a week of good speckled trout fishing with fly; you can prolong your stay in the Labelle district by a week's fishing in Lakes Wade and Ecaire, where good fly-fishing is obtained. A couple of weeks at those waters will suffice. Now proceed to Labelle, 23 miles distant, and at Lakes Caribou and Labelle, 2 and 4 Cucumber, and not be disappointed. But it is in the lakes near Nominingi, 24 miles from Labelle, that you will get all that the expert fisher with rod and fly can desire. Here is a series of small lakes—Petit Nominingi, St. Joseph, Gaumont, Brochet, and Sucrerie—all of which abound beyond dream in speckled trout, varying in size from 1 lb. to 8 lbs. They are as game and tricky as the black bass, and exceedingly beautiful. In fact, one of the phases which make a month's fishing in these lakes particular interesting is that in no two lakes are the trout exactly alike. They show small, but appreciable, difference in size, shape, color and taste. So that the fisherman may always rely on getting fresh pleasures as he proceeds from lake to lake in the Nominingi region. It should be added that the trout in these lakes appeal especially to the expert who prides himself on his ability to cast a fly.

Large grey trout are to be caught in the bigger lakes, especially Gaumont, Nominingi, Commandant and Louise, but the first is the best and most popular with the devotees of this kind of sport. The trolling must be done with spoon bait or minnows, and from a slowly moving canoe. For variety one may try the fly, but this has been found practically ineffective. The reason is that in May, when the trout season opens, few winged insects are seen on the big lakes, and the grey trout, being a good student of nature, seems to know this, and will not be fooled by the artificial fly.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

CONFESSIONS OF A FOOL

By M. QUAD

Copyright, ..., by Associated Literary Press.

As a boy, born in the town of Colville, of parents in moderate circumstances, John Williams was called dull. When he had reached his majority he was accounted "light in the head." He was a butt of ridicule for years and years, and no one could ever remember that he resented it. When he was told, as was often the case, that he was only half witted he laughed in a good natured way. If people laughed at him he laughed back, and if the joke was on him it seemed to please him as much as if some one else had been hit. There was only one thing about the town fool which was not as plain as day. From the time he was eighteen years old he kept a diary. It was often wondered what he wrote down, but no one ever had a chance to see. The diary didn't take in daily events, as was one day discovered, but in the course of twelve years an abundance of things were jotted down. At the age of thirty John Williams was fatally injured by the kick of a horse. When it was given out that he had only three or four days to live the public had no sympathy to waste. Perhaps the town fool didn't expect any. From time to time the doctors told him he was a doomed man, and he began to set his house in order—that is, he had his diaries brought to his bed and sent for a justice of the peace and a worthy witness. He had a few deathbed confessions to make. No. 1 went back twelve years. A sawmill in the town had been destroyed by fire. The day after the fire a man named Thompson had put a redhot cent on the sidewalk for the town fool to pick up. The diary recorded both events. The confession was to the effect that John Williams had seen Thompson set fire to the mill. It was written out and sworn to and witnessed, and then came confession No. 2. In that same year some one had stolen three smoked hams from the cellar of a villager. Following close upon the loss of the hams, as duly recorded in the diary, the village blacksmith had ducked the town fool in his water tub for a joke. The confession was to the effect that Williams and the blacksmith stole the hams and that the latter was the only one to profit by the theft. The two confessions implicated men who had always been considered upright, and the justice felt it his duty to say:

"John, this is serious business. You know you have only three days to live."

"Yes, I know," replied John, "but we have hardly begun yet. I've got to get a whole carload of things off my mind before I go."

No. 3 dated back eleven years. A horse had been stolen from a nearby farmer, and about the same date a village painter named Swayne had painted the town fool's boots a bright red by way of a joke. The confession solemnly confessed that the painter and Williams had stolen the horse and turned him over to a stranger to be run out of town and sold. Many little details were put down, and, as it was solemnly sworn to, the justice heaved a sigh over the deceit and wickedness of a man who had always been looked up to as full of integrity.

Confession No. 4 went back ten years. A church edifice belonging to the Methodists had been set on fire and partly destroyed. It had been pretty well settled that it was the work of tramps who had broken in, but no one had been arrested. Williams now confessed that the Widow Davidson had hired him for $5 to set the fire.

Confession No. 5 was a corker. Some seven years previous there had been a local election in which party feelings ran high. Just before the election came on one of the candidates for mayor had been badly shocked by a bolt of lightning which struck the house. Nobody had ever questioned the fact that it was a straight case of thunder and lightning, but now the dying man wanted to wash his conscience. He named four prominent men in the village who were in a conspiracy, the murder of the candidate. They hadn't let him in on the ground floor or any other floor, but he had been abroad the night of the storm and had seen one of the conspirators strike the candidate with a bludgeon and then leap out of the window. The would be murderer believed he had accomplished his purpose, and there was great rejoicing as he rejoined his fellow conspirators.

The justice hesitated, questioned and protested, but the town fool was firm. He insisted that everything should go down and be sworn to. He died declaring that he had signed nothing but what was true, and the justice felt that he had to move in the matter. The whole town was by the ears at once. Those six confessions included everybody who had ever cracked a joke at the town fool's expense, and that meant seven-eighths of the population. Although the doctors certified that Billy's mind was clear to the last, it was too big a bite for the law. After three or four warrants had been issued the whole affair was dropped—that is, was legally dismissed—but it wasn't the end of it by any means. Everybody swore to his own innocence and declared his belief in the guilt of everybody else, and in one year there were a score of damage suits. It was five years before the affair finally sank out of sight. The town had a heap of fun at the expense of the town's fool, but in dying he had more fun than squared the account.

BUDDHISM'S FALL IN ASIA FORECAST BY HISTORIANS

Scandal Among Priests of Hongwanji Said to Be Cause.

Charges of scandal among the priests of the Hongwanji, one of the ancient Buddhistic sects, have aroused historical scribes to unusual activity and a furore of written discussion on the merits and demerits of the order is now in progress.

Takashima Beiho, Buddhist writer, strongly urges the removal of the administrative headquarters of the Hongwanji from Kyoto to Tokio.

"A determined effort should be made," he says, "to restore the credit of the Hongwanji, which has fallen so low. At such a time like the present, when morality is so much neglected, the Buddhists, as spiritual leaders of the people, ought to do their utmost to bring about reforms both among individuals and the nation.

Outgrowing Religion.

"The importance of the mission of Buddhism has been forgotten by the quarreling priests."

"In Japan the tendency, as in Europe and America," says another writer, "is away from churches and creeds, which have lost their power of influence and attraction. Only by Buddhists outside the ranks of the priesthood organizing a strong and powerful movement and taking the affairs of the Hongwanji into their own hands, is there likely to be any improvement in conditions which have become an open scandal in this country."

Reviewing ancient history in which a policy of military frightfulness and the slaughter of women and children are mentioned, the critics refer to more recent times for their chief instances of scandal.

Charge Corrupt Conduct.

Disorder in the financial administration of the Hongwanji, corrupt conduct of priestly officials and the profligate lives of the abbots are some of the accusations that bring down a storm of condemnation.

"Much excitement was caused by these revelations," continues the writer, "the Buddhists throughout the country showing themselves bitter on learning that the chief abbot, whom they believed to be a very holy man, was guilty of the conduct attributed to him.

"Efforts were made to reform the evil conditions, under which priests were found indulging in the vice and sensual pleasures which they denounced from their pulpits."

Other accusations charging that huge amounts of money were scattered and the Hongwanji left deeply in debt are looked upon as a cause of alarm.

The Hongwanji is the chief branch of the Shin or Monto sect, founded by Shinran in 1224. It took its name from the great temple in Kyoto, the seat of the sect, built in 1272 by the daughter and grandson of Shinran.

The Newest Idea In Hosiery

We paid a big sum to obtain new and improved machines to knit seamless, full-fashioned hosiery—the most up-to-date in the world. We control these machines—no others can use them.

Mercury Hosiery

knitted on these new machines has the narrow ankle that fits without a wrinkle—something that women have long wanted in Canadian-made hosiery. We get this by fashioning the hose at the sides (see 2 in the picture).

The toe also is perfectly turned and fits without a wrinkle (see 3).

The dotted lines at toe and ankle show how much wider ordinary hosiery is.

No. 1 at the top shows the fashioning here which makes the hosiery more elastic and comfortable at this point.

HOLLAND HOUSE-HUNTER CALLED OBJECT OF PITY

Scarcity of Rentals Due to War's Interference and Influx of Foreign Population.

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands—The house-hunter in Holland in the days of the great world-war of 1917 is assuredly an object for pity. The scarcity of houses for rent at Amsterdam, The Hague and other centres has greatly increased because of war's interference with the house-building industry and of the influx of foreign population into the Netherlands. At The Hague, for instance, of Belgians alone ther are thousands who have temporarily settled. The lack is particularly felt in respect of apartments—the Dutch "upper house" or "lower house"—ranging between $200 and $300 in rent.

So keen was the hunt after houses in Amsterdam recently that high rewards were o fered for addresses of houses to let. Races have taken place, and bribing has been practiced to find houses. If in the morning a house was to let, in the afternoon it was let. In the brief meantime thirty or forty prospective tenants had rung the bell and asked to see it.

The result is that landlords have become more and more particular, their demands have multiplied. A special law was passed by parliament to prevent the undue inflation of rents, so that the natural effect of the demand has been artificially prevented. Certain classes of houses are unobtainable save by purchase, and the purchase prices have risen enormously, certain houses changing hands rapidly at an ever-mounting price.

Irritated Skin—Eczema

HEAT IRRITATES the skin, and sudden changes of temperature tend to set up skin troubles, such as eczema or piles.

Because Dr. Chase's Ointment positively cures eczema and piles there is no place where it is better known or more fully appreciated than in the blacksmith shop, machine shop or foundry.

Relief from the itching and stinging sensations, which make these ailments so annoying, comes almost as soon as the ointment is applied, and cure is the result of a little patient use of this healing, soothing treatment.

But you must be sure to get the genuine Dr. A. W. Chase's Ointment, for imitations and substitutes are sure to disappoint.

The War Needs of Canada

THE NEED FOR CONSCRIPTION OF MEN FOR PRODUCTION

BY BENJAMIN ANTHORP GOULD

FIVE

It is probably premature to discuss at any length the need under the above caption, for the reason that it is practicable to enforce such conscription of men only in a country which is very thoroughly organized for war purposes. Canada will have to advance a long way towards such organization before such conscription can be accomplished except in a few special cases, although the need for preparing for such conscription and the possible ultimate need of enforcing it may be indicated.

In those nations which are living under the constant shadows of the war, like France, England and Germany, in those countries where everyone has to think of the war all day and dream of the war all night, it may be possible to perfect national organization for war to a point where every useful human unit may be allocated to an appropriate duty. This question of conscription of men or of conscription of service in the necessary industries is closely related and depended upon a complete system of national service. Until such national service is efficiently organized a true conscription of men and women for production is out of the question.

There may, however, be almost immediately what may be termed a moral conscription for such purposes, and this may prove of considerable value in increasing necessary production. Such moral conscription can only be accomplished by continuously bringing before the people in concrete form the immediate needs of the country. It is a matter to be attempted by a government Publicity Bureau, which shall be assisted in the various localities by government commissions of patriotic committees working under government direction. There is in Canada a vast amount of patriotism which needs only accurate direction to accomplish a great deal. There are tens of thousands of men and women who are doing little or nothing for the war because they do not know what they ought to do. If it were possible to organize in each community a system, under a co-ordinated direction from Ottawa, to sort out the men and women ready to serve into the different classes in which they could be useful and give to each of them specified work, to be done according to their different abilities and the different amounts of time which they could give to it, the total results would be very considerable. We have seen the value of public appeal in the assistance which has already been rendered in harvesting the various crops, and we recognise that what has been accomplished is only a small fraction of what could have been accomplished had there been an organization more complete and effective than that which has hitherto been established.

In a country completely organized for war, every human unit would be cardcatalogued into its particular place of greatest usefulness. As stated before, we cannot in Canada approach anything of this kind, but we can go a great deal further than we have hitherto gone in indicating the particular places where our citizens can be of use. We can, if necessary, even go further and enforce an actual conscription of men for those essential industries which are at present undermanned. There would for instance, be nothing different in principle in compelling a skilled workman to serve in time of war in the government shipyards from compelling him to serve in the army. The general principle of such conscription is recognized in those countries which will not allow strikes on government work or on government transportation during the war.

It may be said that the tendency of such organization as has been indicated would be toward a Prussianism as evil as the Prussianism in Europe, which we are fighting. The answer to this is that fire cannot be fought except by fire, and that it is far better to Prussianize ourselves under our own direction voluntarily for the few years of the duration of the war than to have ourselves Prussianized under Prussian control, involuntarily, by the Prussians themselves, not for a few years only but until we have strength to throw off such tyranny by revolution.

In the meantime, it is absolutely necessary that those industries which are essential to the production of war requirements of the government shall have the men needed to operate them. Hitherto the method adopted to accomplish this has been to buy the required labour away from other industries by offering excessive wages in particularly urgent instances. It is evident that this method is unscientific and may at any time break down. It is therefore quite within the bounds of possibility that the government may at any time for the salvation of the country be compelled to enforce a conscription of the services of certain classes of skilled operators, and the public mind should be educated to an appreciation of the fact that such conscription is one of the rights of a democratic state in time of war. It ought not to be within the powe rof any class of workmen to hold up needed war material either in time or for exorbitant pay. The profiteering of the work man, though less individually, as a whole may be as great as the profiteering of the contractor, and neither should be permitted by a government which has the power to prevent them.

1. Verses 1-6. Who are the men today, that correspond to the "shepherds of Israel' in that day?

2. What is wrong to-day, with the men in authority, who make and administer the laws of the land?

3. Wherein do the pastors of the churches fail to act like good shepherds.

4 Verses 1-6. How do the pastors compare in worldly comfort with the memebrs of their churches?

5. Should the pastors pay as much attention to the poor, the outcast, and the churchless, as they do to the rich and well to do, and to what extent are they doing it?

6 To what extent are our churches spending their energies upon themselves, or upon the poor, and rich churchless masses?

7. Verses 7-10. If Jesus the Chief Shepherd of the sheep, were to come to the earth and visit the churches, to what extent would he condemn or praise them and their pastors?

8. The churches are being torn with the wolves of tobacco, sports, evil speaking, novel reading, theatre going, and general sensuousness. What are the pastors doing to exterminate these wild beasts?

9. When pastors knowingly wink at wrong doing in their churches, so as not to create a disturbance, why would you say, or not, that God's words here, "I am against the shepherds," applies to them? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the club.)

10. Verses 11-16. What limit is there to a Christian's right to depend upon God direct, for shepherding and loving care, without relying upon any human source of comfort?

12. Verses 17-22. What proportion of the members of Christian churches from your observation, would you say are saved?

14. Verses 17-22. Is it legitimate, or not, and why, for rich church members to live in style in costly houses(and keep up with the fashions while there are members of the same church suffering from the lack of common necessities.?

15. What is the standing before God of a member of the church, who comes in ocntact every day with many unsaved sinners, and never speaks a word to them about their souls?

16. Verses 23 24. What direct "shepherd" care, has Jesus over any one of his flock on the earth?

17. Verse 25. What is the nature of the "Covenant of peace," which God makes with his people?

18. Verse 26. What more blessed are the business, the home, and the family, of a true Christian over that of a sinner?

19. Verse 27. What reason is there o suppose that the farm of a man who lives close to God will produce more than the farm of a sinner?

20. Verses 28-31. What is the advantage to the home business and personal happiness of a Christian over that of a sinner?

WAR TAKES A SLEEVE OFF EVENING GOWNS

CHICAGO.—Despite the fact that womens' evening gowns with only one sleeve will be fashionable the forthcoming season, there will be no reduction in the price. Quite the contrary.

The Fashion Art League of America opened the advance showing of autumn designs to-day.

Mme. Marguerite, one of the promoters and exhibitors of the show, sighed deeply as she told an interviewer this evening that the war had tamed Dame Fashion.

"Woollens must be conserved," said Mme. Marguerite. "Our soldiers must have warm clothes, so our women must be content with just about half the cloth in their tailored attire."

A casual survey would indicate that the women are quite well satisfied with half or even less than the usual amount of clothing.

Russian Air Fleet Engaged With Germans Around Riga

Enemy Submarines and Trawlers Active Near Russian Port on the Baltic---German Planes Drop Bombs in Raid on Shipping Centre.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:—

PETROGRAD, August 31.—There has been increased activity in the Baltic on the part of the Germans during the last week. German torpedo boats, submarines and trawlers were observed in the vicinity of the Gulf of Riga, says to-day's official announcement. Forty aeroplanes have raided islands in the Gulf.

Ninety bombs were dropped yesterday by enemy aviators on Russian ships of the fleet and harbour works. Russian airmen engaged the hostile machines. None of the Russian aircraft were damaged.

The statement follows:

"On the Baltic Sea, for the past week, the enemy has shown increased activity. About forty enemy bomb carriers and battle planes have carried out a series of raids in various islands in the Gulf of Riga and at the entrance to the Gulf of Finland, dropping about ninety bombs on ships of the fleet and on harbour works. Our naval airmen had a series of engagements with the enemy in the course of which we suffered no loss or damage.

"The appearance of enemy ships—torpedo boats and submarines—in the vicinity of our coast, and the operations of enemy trawlers at the entrance of the Gulf of Riga, have been observed.

PARIS, September 1.—The American Aviation Service on Monday will open its headquarters near the front.

CHICAGO, September 1.—The dove of peace, greatly resembling a white elephant—was roosting in Chicago to-day. The Orphan People's Council of America for Democracy and Peace apparently had accepted Father Dearborn after being disowned by Fargo, N.D., Minneapolis, Minn., and Hudson, Wis. Eighty delegates who left New York Thursday afternoon for the peace conference somewhere in the west, arrived here last night on their special train. So far as Chicago is concerned the conference has the approval of Mayor Thompson. "I can do nothing to prevnt them from meeting in Chicago," said the Mayor. "Pacifists are law-abiding citizens. I know of no law to prevent free speech in this country. Thank God, some folks have not the power to change the constitution of the United States every fifteen minutes."

(By John N. Hearley, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

ROME, September 1.—"Pope Benedict regards President Wilson as more firmly set on the continuance of the war than any other belligerent ruler, according to authoritative Vatican reports to-day. No attempt was made in Papal circles to conceal bitter disappointment at the American reply. The charge was voiced that the President had contradicted himself and had begged the question. Emphasis was laid to-day on the fact that despite the unfavourable reply Pope Benedict does not propose to abandon his attempts to restore peace.

When al the belligerents shall have replied thes. Holy Father proposes another attempt. A second note will probably set forth the points of unanimity in peace aims developed in all the reply notes, and will discuss the points of variance, indicating Italy's acceptance of the American reply.

NEW YORK, August 31.—The Associated Press issued the following to-night:—

The Italians are still making gains on the Bainsizza plateau, north of Gorizia, and also have renewed their offensive to the south of the Carso plateau. More than 600 additional Austrian prisoners and five machine guns have been captured in the Bainsizza region. South of this region, on the dominating peak of Monte San Gabriele, more ground has been taken. On the Carso plateau the big Caproni airplanes are aiding in the attack.

AUSTRIAN FLEET MENACED.

The New York World this morning, in a despatch from Washington, says the Italian Embassy has received advices from Rome as to further successes of General Cadorna, and indicating that:

"The Austrian fleet, bottled up in Pola, also is in danger, as it is the intention of the Italians son to turn the guns of Anglo-Italian monitors, now busy bombarding the coast to the northwest of Trieste, on the warships of the enemy."

LONDON, September 1.—South of Lens and in the neighbourhood of the coast the enemy's artillery was active during the night, Field Marshal Haig reported from the British front to-day.

MONTREAL, P.Q., September 1.—Representatives of the leading Canadian railways met to-day in Montreal and decided that in view of the continued shortage of farm labour in the west, it was advisable to arrange for supplementary series of harvesters' excursions from Ontario and Quebec only. Those from east of Ottawa will leave September 11th, and those from Ottawa and west on September 12th.

The Shoe Factory By-law And What It Will Mean To City

This By-law is for the purpose of securing a new industry the manufacture of shoes.

At present the Ackerman Company's factory property is assessed for $23,790.00. This is the assessment placed upon it by the Assessor, at its full assessable value. If the by-law is passed it will not lower this assessment.

The Company will continue to pay, as now, full taxes on the full assessable value of the property, as it now is.

If the factory is enlarged, as it probably will be after the Shoe Factory has been well established, the exemption will only apply for ten years from this year, to any new buildings erected on the property.

And on any such new buildings the Company will pay school taxes, patriotic rates and war taxes.

For this small concession, at most, the city will secure a new factory in a staple line of manufacture that has every prospect of development into a large industry.

Other places would like to secure this factory. One offer includes a building as well as exemption. If, by any chance, this By-law should be defeated, it is not out of the bounds of possibility that this offer will be further considered and accepted.

The Ackerman Co. will continue the harness factory. The Shoe Factory will be a new industry that Peterborough should not run the danger of losing.

The voting on the by-law will take place on Thursday next, September 6th. All municipal electors have a vote, and an elector can vote at one place only. 2d

Judge's Comments.

Toronto, Aug. 27, 1917.

Gentlemen,— I take great pileasure in handing you herwith a summary of results in the lawn and garden competition promoted by your Society this summer for the beautification of Peterborough.

One could not help but be agreeably surprised at the skill shown by some of the competitors in the arrangement of flowering plants, and also with the interest taken in vegetable production.

The majority of those entered in the various classes deserve high commendation for the results obtained, particularly so Messrs. Kennedy, Williams and McKee, who though really not eligible under your rules, went to much trouble and expense to keep up their enviable reputations as first class gardeners ,which they have admirably done and with a wide margin to spare.

I am greatly indebted to yourself, Mr. Stocker and other officers of the Society for assistance given and courtesy shown me which made my work a real pleasure and I sincerely hope that those who have not been fortunate enough to be among the winners this year, that that fact will only serve to stimulate their efforts another year. To that end I have much pleasure in forwarding you a sterling silver cup to be competed for in whichever class your Society shall decide, the only provision which I shall impose is that it has to be won twice (not necessarily in succession) before it becomes the property of the successful competitor.

With best wishes for continued success and a deeper interest in your competitions by the residents of your progressive city, I remain,

Yours very truly,
FRED W. ADAMS.

PTE. P. S. ARMSTRONG.

Mrs. Peter Armstrong, Waterford street, has received official word from Ottawa that her husband, Pte. Peter Saunders Armstrong, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, has been admitted to No. 22 General Hospital at Camiers, on August 19th, suffering, according to the telegram, from a "sprained ankle wound." Pte. Armstrong is one of three sons of Mr. A. E. Armstrong of Douro, who went overseas with the 93rd Battalion. He was transferred to the 19th Battalion at the front. Another brother was wounded some time ago.

In connection with Pte. Chas. E. Foy, reported wounded in last night's Examiner, it is learned that he has not been wounded, but is suffering from severe gas poisoning. Pte. Foy is a former employee of B. F. Ackerman and Co., and has many friends here who will wish him a speedy recovery.

Ottawa, Aug. 23, 1917

Lt.-Gen. Sir Arthur Currie,
Headquarters Canadian Corps,
France:

On behalf of all ranks of our military forces in Canada, I desire to extend to you and to the officers and men under your command warmest congratulations upon the splendid manner in which Canadian troops have conducted themselves during the fighting around Lens, in defeating the pick of the German army against heavy odds, and steadfastly holding gains made in the face of desperate and repeated counter-attacks. Canada is prouder than ever of her gallant sons who have so bravely and determinedly maintained her honour. We mourn with you the loss of many brave comrades.

(Signed) SIR EDWARD KEMP.

London, Aug. 30, '17.

Sir Edward Kemp,
Minister of Militia,
Ottawa, Canada.

Your message of congratulation is sincerely appreciated by all ranks Canadian Corps. Tell our comrades in the Canadian militia that, in addition to winning and consolidating ground of great tactical value, we have inflicted casualties on the foe at least triple our own. In repeated and determined counter-attacks the flower of the German army was thrown against us, but our line remained unshaken as our own Rockies. Will not the pride which you say Canada has in her sons inspire her to send us men to take the place of those so nobly fallen.

(Sgd.) Lt.-Gen. Sir Arthur Currie,
General Officer Commanding Canadian Corps in France.

The House listened to the foregoing in a dead silence, but there was a strong outburst of applause at its conclusion, mostly from the Government side of the House. The last sentence of Gen. Currie's message is consider a direct plea for conscription.

Alvin Gray, a Millbrook boy overseas writes the following interesting letter:

This is Monday afternoon and I am in care of E hut, trying to catch up with my correspondence. Had a letter from Alvin yesterday and he seemed to be getting along fine and enjoying his work, as a Signaller.

Well, since leaving dear old Millbrook, I have seen a lot of land and water. I was drafted from West Sandling to Whitley where I am now. Have been to Aldershot for a course in musketry. When on leave, I went to London and Glasgow and was greatly interested with everything I saw.

Was on bivouac scheme last week, covering 50 miles in three days, besides manoeuvres. One night we did not sleep at all, but had night manoeuvres, and marched eight miles in the dark. This is the life, all right, to make a man hard against any fatigue. We often sleep out all night. The strenuous work is in this country and the danger and lonliness more in France, I guess.

There is a great and awful part being played in the destiny of Canada at home and on the battle field. What the Canada of to-morrow will be is being settled now. I feel as Longfellow in those lines, "We are living, we are dwelling in a grand and awful time, in an age of ages, telling, to be living in sublime." This war is the making of many men. A man's bit is not done because he has been to the front and got a gold stripe, far from it. It is then just beginning, because he has a different experience and a broader view than the men at home can ever have. So far, I know this life in the army means more to me than years at college could ever have. Well I received a "souvenir mirror" and appreciated it very much. It brings back old memories all right. I am sending you a piece of heather from the Commons. They are covered with it in this section of the country. Kindest wishes to everyone.

ALVIN GRAY.

Mrs. Dobson, of Baltimore P.O., has received the following letter in regard to the death of her son, Gunner T. H. Robson, of No. 1 Siege Battery, killed at the front:

France, 5-8-17.

Dear Mrs. Robson,—With the deepest regret I do write to inform you of the death of your son, who was killed in action to-day beside one of the guns of his battery. I was not at the battery myself and have only heard the sad news by telephone, but I understand that a shell dropped just beside them and your boy was very badly wounded and died a few minutes later before he could be taken to the dressing station only two hundred yards away. Three other men were wounded at the same time.

I cannot express to you my sorrow for he was such a fine boy that I knew how much you must miss him. No man in the battery was a better, braver soldier than he and I never heard a word except praise for him from any of his officers or men. He was the hardest working man and he gave the least trouble of any man I ever saw in my service, and I hope that the knowledge that I considered him a model soldier in every way will be of some satisfaction to you.

He was always so good tempered that he was a favourite with every one and I am sure he will be terribly missed.

During the eighteen months that he has been with me I have always seen him with a smile on his face, cheerful and happy. During all our hard fighting last year on the Somme, and on many occasions since he has proved himself one of my very coolest men under trying conditions and I feel that the battery can ill afford to lose him.

Please extend my deepest sympathy to all his familu and tell them that I will forward all possible particulars about his burial and his grave. I am arranging for a Presbyterian parson to conduct the service and I will try and have a photograph of his grave taken later on. We will have a heavy oak case planted over his grave and a brass nameplate erected. If it is possible I will attend his funeral and will have all his friends and comrades that can be allowed to leave their guns.

Please accept my deepest sympathy and rest assured that I will be very glad to give you any further information and send you any later particulars that I can.

Please address my letters to Major W. G. Beeman, O.C. 1st, Canadian Siege Battery, B.E.F., France.

Yours sincerely,
W. G. BEEMAN.

THE CANADIANS INFLICT LOSSES UPON THE ENEMY

PTE. PETER S. ARMSTRONG, 533 Waterford street, a former member of the 93rd Battalion, who is officially reported wounded.

Germans Are Clinging Tenaciously to Lens Despite the Pounding of the Canadian Guns and Projection of Gas.

SHOW NERVOUSNESS

(By Stewart Lyon, Special Correspondent of the Canadian Press.

Canadian Headquarters in France (via London), August 31. — Watchful waiting has, for the moment, followed the recent intense activity on this part of the front. The enemy clings most tenaciously to his cellars in Lens despite the steady pounding of our guns and the frequent projection of gas. Early yesterday morning drums of gas were thrown into that part of the town in which the cellars are the most numerous. The Germans are mortally afraid of gas in this form and most of the prisoners taken tell of serious losses from gas attacks.

Despite these losses and the extreme difficulty of bringing forward food and ammunition into Lens enemy working parties take advantage of every opportunity to repair their damaged positions.

Currie's Gunners Efficient.

A private of a Manitoba battalion who took part in the recent attack on Green Crassier and was wounded in the hip by an exploding bomb so that he could not walk crawled into a shell hole well within the enemy's line and lay there for five days without food before he was able to return to our side. He states that night after night enemy working parties were out repairing the damage done by our guns and trench mortars.

At a time when the German infantry is almost in revolt against their insufficient artillery support, it is worth while noting that never before have the relations between the Canadians in the trenches and the gunners supporting them been so intimate. The Corps Commander has sent the gunners a message, through the General commanding the Canadian artillery, in which the praises their splendid work in the recent most successful operations and adds that the assaulting infantry say that the artillery preparations has never been more complete or the support better. "S.O.S." calls were repeatedly answered within thirty seconds. The success the message concluded, must be ours when the co-operation between all the services was so marked and the devotion to duty so outstanding.

Foe Guns Retaliate.

The strain under which the gunners have been carrying on their work since before the battle of Vimy Ridge has been great but it has been lessened lately. The review which was held two days ago was followed by a march past of a greater number of guns and gunners than have been present at any similar event since the Canadian troops first came to France.

The pushing forward of our outpost line in the sector east of St. Laurent yesterday afternoon caused a heavy artillery retaliation which took the form of a barrage over a considerable part of our front, evidently in the belief that an attack was intended. During the night many flares were sent up, and the enemy talked a good deal in his sleep, but this morning (Friday) all is quiet again. A wounded officer was captured, together with two men in attendance in the fight that followed the extension of our outpost lines.

RUSSIAN PEOPLE ARE PREPARING TO MAKE SACRIFICES

Have Been Told the Whole Bare Truth About the Crisis and Premier Kerensky is Confident That They Will Arise to the Occasion

THE MOSCOW CONFERENCE

(By William G. Shepperd, U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

MOSCOW, Sept. 1.—Premier Kerensky stated to-day that he believed the Moscow preference has shown the whole nation is preparing actively to make sacrifice for the country's defences. The National Assembly, he told the United Press was convoked for two objects: First it was considered necessary to get acquainted with the needs and opinions of the country and to tell the whole, bare truth to the representatives of all classes and all races apropos of the Russian crisis. Second, it was to impress on the national conscienceness the necessity of union of all for the defense of the country and of liberty.

After consultation of the temporary government with about 2,500 representatives of the people thus assembled, I am confident both objects have been attained. We are convinced a majority of the people are overwhelmingly democratic and that the whole nation is preparing actively to make sacrifices for the country's defenses. The Premier declared: All sides are willing to make the concessions necessary for united effort. He added: I am sure the nation's impassioned impulse resulting from learning the whole truth will not fade away, but will burn with an ever increasing flame.

Here's A Thirsty Nova Scotian

Swears That He Drinks Two Dozen Bottles of Ale a Day

Special to The Examiner:

HALIFAX, N.S., Sept. 1.—That he drank two dozen bottles of ale a day and that when feeling good he could finish up four dozen bottles a day, was the evidence given in the police court by Peter Flemming, charged with violation of the Nova Scotia Temperance Act. Inspector Tracey had seized two half hogsheads and six barrels of bottle ale at Flemming's former saloon Water street, and the proprietor testified that the liquor was kept soelly for his own use. He testified that the fifty dozen of beer would last him six weeks and that he intended to bottle the two half hogsheads so that when he returned from Prince Edward Island, where he was going for salt baths, his beer would be in good condition.

Ministerial Crisis Looms In France

Special to the Examiner.

PARIS, Sept. 1.—Minister of Interior Malvy precipitated what political circles predicted would result in a new French Ministerial crisis to-day by formally resigning. His leter asserted that he "was now free to face those who slandered him on the floor of the chamber." Heated debates are expected when Malvy takes the floor to reply to his critics. "The situation creates a partial cabinet crisis," declared the Matin today. M. Ribot called a meeting for this afternoon, presumably to consider the resignation.

LABOUR DAY.

Monday, Sept. 3rd is Labour Day, officially decreed a holiday in recognition of the interests and importance of labour. Heretofore on many occasions, labour day has not brought much joy to labour, which had had too many holidays—too much enforced idleness—throughout the year. But this year labour can very consistently take a holiday and take joy in the occasion. Never before in our history has labour had such abundant and well rewarded opportunity for employment and as far as opportunity and reward are concerned never before has labour been so happily circumstanced. Of course there has been, as there nearly always is in human affairs, a fly in the ointment. The high cost of living that has reduced the buying power of a dolalr from forty to fifty per cent. has to a certain degree robbed labour of much of the fruits of its toil. But there's some consolation in having money to spend; and a further consolation in knowing that the money does not go out of the country—it remains to swell the balance of the big interests, the food exploiters, the cold storage magnates and buy decorations for favourites of fortune. The working man may not share in the distribution of titles, but he has the joy of knowing that the high cost of living he has spent his money on, has helped make somebody rich with "a handle to his name."

Conscription clamps the "closure" on manhood, in the interest of war winning, and the politicians clamp the "closure" on the people's representatives in the interests of the "big interests."

A LIVE SENATOR.

Public opinion in its moments of levity and playful spirit, is accustomed to regard and designate the Canadian Senate as a political cemetery, where obsolete or obsolescent politicians are interred. But it sometimes happens that a man of full vigour is buried alive there. One of such seems to be Hon. Senator Frederic Nicholls, of Toronto, who though new to his senatorial honour and responsibility, is proving himself worthy of the one, and is effectively recognizant of the other.

His natural ability, his terse business-like faculty of expression, his intimate and practically acquired knowledge of affairs, and his grasp of commercial and industrial facts and situations, make him a live and useful member of the Senate. He lives in Toronto, but territorially he is the nearest we can expect to come to having a Senator for Peterborough; and his local interests, his interests in the city, and his ability and character justify us in priding ourself on our claim.

Hon. Mr. Nicholls has not been long in the Senate; but he has made a stir among the dry bones. He has not made long speeches, but he has spoken with the authority of his knowledge of practical affairs, and a broad sense of the necessity of the cordination of national interests and activities. His deliverance upon the Conservation of Canadian Trade was practical, as was to be expected; and as was to be expected concrete results followed, for the work of his committee charged with the duty of evolving a plan for developing Canadian export trade after the war brought forward a concrete proposal instead of fine theories. It suggested the establishment of a Canadian Trade and Banking Corporation, on the model of the recently established British Trade Corporation, and the recommendation of the committee will be forwarded to the head of the government with the request that practical consideration be given to the formation of a "Canadian Trade and Banking Corporation." The objects of such a board may, mutatis mutandis, be gathered from a recital of the chief objects of the British prototype, summarized by "Industrial Canada," as follows:

(c) To acquaint themselves with the conditions of trade and with the business requirements of all countries of the world, and to enter into banking arrangements with such countries with colonial and British foreign banks, or where necessary to open up branches in such countries.

(d) To establish, equip and maintain information bureaus in close touch with the Department of Commercial Intelligence of the Board of Trade for furnishing British merchants or manufacturers and the business community generally with reliable data and information upon openings for trade, new contracts, state and other loan and issue proposals, and generally upon all matters relating to foreign trade, and business, and to undertake the examination of industrial projects.

(e) To act as an agent for carrying through overseas commercial and financial transactions in which His Majesty's government may be interested, and to receive official recognition and assistance.

(a) To afford advice and financial assistance to British commercial and industrial undertakings, and generally to further the development of British trade, industry and commerce.

(b) To assist in obtaining orders from abroad for British manufacturers and traders and to grant financial facilities for the execution of such orders.

There is no question of the great importance of conserving, developing and extending our home and foreign trade in the interest of meeting and overcoming the reaction upon our present prosperity that will come when the stimulus of war orders shall be removed. The action initiated and indicated by the special committee of Hon. Senator Nicholls, seems to promise excellent results, and be an important factor in easing the shocks that will necessarily accompany the period of readjustment that must follow the conclusion of the war.

In cash grants, land grants, and guarantees, the Canadian Northern Railway has already received the equivalent of three hundred and seventy millions of the people's money; and now more—No "closure" is applied to the hopper of the "big interests."

PRAISE AND BLAME.

The city council comes in for many hard knocks, some of which they may not deserve and some of which they well earn. They have done some things well, and deserve credit.

In a general way, the council deserves credit for the better results that come from their dealing with our streets which are in a better condition, but still far from ideal and possible, this season, than has obtained for a long time.

Another place where considerable credit may be deposited, seems to be the municipal coal yard enterprise, which seems to meet popular approval and to promise important service of popular convenience.

Whether it fully meets or fails to meet popular expectation, the Mayor, the city council and the city solicitor are to be commended for prompt action and diplomatic management that has made a municipal coal yard, with official approval possible.

While Peterborough by the exercise of these conditions has succeeded, other cities, such as Brantford, Ottawa, Guelph and other places, have failed to show cause why their application for authorization of municipal coal yards should be officially sanctioned. So much for the credit side.

Per contra, there is, however, one thing in which the present city council and the past are greatly to blame—lack of interest in the crowning summer beauty of Peterborough—its shade trees.

Not only lack of interest, but virtual hostility, is chargeable. The city has officially never planted a street tree, but it has officially, officiously and maliciously cut down and destroyed, hundreds. The city seems to ignore the value of our street trees.

They are the property and pride, the comfort and shelter of the public, and public interests are paramount to every personal consideration.

The council is ready to meet the request of any individual—a selfish request as involving an injury to public interests.

A request for permission to remove a tree is granted as cavalierly and inconsiderately as if it were a weed, the growth of three months, instead of a tree the growth of from a quarter to half a century.

In this respect, city councils place themselves in the class of the German. In respect of German villainy in the destruction of trees in districts they are compelled to abandon, the London Spectator quotes Scripture to show that they are violating a divine command — as contained in the twentieth chapter of Deuteronomy:

When thou shalt besiege a city a long time in making war against it, thou shalt not destroy the trees thereof. Thou shalt not cut them down for the tree of the field is man's life.

Here we have divine recognition of the high place trees occupy in the life of man and divine prohibition of their wanton or unavoidable destruction.

No civic permission to remove a street tree should be given if there is a possible means of saving it. In Toronto we see wide pavements diverted and roadways narrowed to save some stately tree. In dealing with our own street trees a similar care should be exercised.

The city council seem to forget, and individuals, too, that the public have the chief interest in our street trees; for in their destruction the public interest is not at all consulted but private interests that in most cases could be met by adopting means to save a tree, and thus show some deference to popular feeling and popular rights.

If the city fathers would divert some of their coal yard enthusiasm to another form of potential fuel, they would supplement the winter comfort of their constituents with contribution to the service, pleasure and delights of the citizens.

Peterborough is in need of esthetic culture as well as coal.

Why You Should Support The Shoe Factory By-law

One of the Best Factory Propositions Ever Submitted to the People—No Free Site But Only Fixed Exemption For a Period of Ten Years

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Kindly permit us to use your columns to make an explanation to the electors regarding the Shoe Factory By-law, which is to be voted upon on Thursday, the 6th day of September next.

This is one of the best factory propositions ever submitted to the City. Usually the City has given to a new factory a free site and an exemption from taxes. The Council and the people have endorsed this policy frequently.

In this case a free site is not asked for. The Ackerman Co. have some space in their present harness factory building in which the Shoe Factory will be started. It will be a new industry, and it will have to compete for business with old established concerns in other places. For this reason the company wishes to be able to calculate closely upon what its overhead expenses will be, and therefore asks that its assessment shall be fixed at the present amount for ten years. The City will not lose anything it now has. It will not give a site, and the company will continue to pay taxes on the full assessment of the lands and buildings it now owns.

The company agrees to employ at least thirty hands, but expects to employ double that number before long. When the number of employees is increased larger premises will probably be needed, and in that case the will be on the new buildings, for the company will still pay taxes on the sent factory. Unless this building is erected the City will not give the company anything, and if the new building is erected the only exemption will be on the new buildings, for the company will still pay taxeh on the full assessment of the land, and even on the new building it will pay school taxes and patriotic and war rates. And for this small exemption, at most, the City will secure a new factory in a staple line that has every prospect of developing into a large industry.

At the present time there is no lack of employment. Even so that is no reason why we should not try to add to the number of our prosperous industries and continue to build up the City. But when the war is over, and we all fervently hope that will be soon, more employment will be needed, and the more industries we then have the better it will be.

Other places—any other place—would jump at the chance of securing the Shoe Factory on the terms of this By-law. We are quite certain the electors of Peterborough will support the By-law, but we wish to point out that they can only do that by voting for it on September 6th, and we hope that the electors will remember the date and take the little trouble needed to vote for the By-law, and thus assist to advance the interests of our City.

Yours truly,
JOS. J. DUFFUS, Mayor.

HON. SENATOR NICHOLLS' SPEECH ON CANADIAN SHIPPING INTERESTS

Delivered in the Canadian Senate--A Strong Plea For Co-ordinated Development

Hon. Senator Nicholls as officially reported, spoke in the Senate on the subject of Canadian shipping interests, as follows:

Hon. Mr. Nicholls: I do not intend to take up the time of the House at any length; but I have listened with a great deal of interest to the honourable gentleman for the Gulf division of Quebec (Hon. Mr. L'Esperance), and I do think he has done rightly in calling the attention of this honourable House to the subject matter of his motion. I am particularly interested in it from the standpoint of foreign trade and the future of our trade after the war, and in my few remarks I propose to deal with this question on a broader basis than that of the mere question of adding to the shipping facilities of Quebec and using it more frequently as a port from which our exports should be shipped. I have before me a paragraph from a speech by Dr. Emery R. Johnson, Professor of Transportation and Commerce at the Pennsylvania University, one of the highest authorities on transportation in the United States. It is very brief. It reads:

A country of continental proportions can engage largely and profitably in foreign trade only if equipped with economical means of transportation both by land and by sea. The country well supplied with railways and inland waterways that are co-ordinately and efficiently managed and that serve all sections capable of settlement and development is able to engage successfully in the production of exports and to make profitable use of large quantities of imports both of raw materials and of more or less completely fabricated manufactures. The entire country with all its resources and energies may engage in industrial competition with other countries and sections of the world.

The point to which I wsh to draw the attention of this honourable House is that our land transportation and our ocean transportation have not been and are not now co-ordinated. We have spent in round figures, $200,000,000 in developing our canal system. We have spent another $200,000,000 in what might be called facilities for water transportation in the way of dredging harbour facilities, wharves, docks, and so forth. To that $400,000,000 may be added hundreds of millions of more dollars spent for the development of our railway facilities. Now, that is all spent for one purpose without any co-ordination in so far as ocean traffic is concerned. Let me give an example of what I call businesslike co-ordination for the purpose of reaching a desired end. The Canadian Pacific Railway has a transportation line to the Pacific coast and it has at Vancouver its own fleet of ocean steamships. That is co-ordination. It is able to bring the traffic of the Far East to the western hemisphere. It not only adds very largely to the employment of capital and labour in Canada, but it adds to our national wealth, and advertises Canada more effectively, I believe, than any other advertisement. We are about to have before us in this honourable House—at all events, there are this afternoon being discussed in the other House—proposals for the taking over by the Government of the Canadian Northern railway.

That will give us, with the Intercolonial railway, a through line from the Atlantic to the Pacific; and, as the honourable member from the Gulf ports says, we have the most magnificent harbours in Montreal and Quebec. I rather object to Quebec being cited specifically, because at St. John and at Halifax we have spent millions of dollars in improvements. The question is whether the attention of this House should not be seriously directed to the fact that there is now an opportunity for the Government to give consideration to the question of co-ordinating our inland and ur ocean transportation, to the end that the hundreds of millions of dollars already spent on our inland systems of communication and for the improvement of our water ways should be so utilized that this country can get the benefit of through overseas traffic by national shipping through national ports.

You will understand that something has to be done when I tell you that there is plenty of scope for shipbuilding. For five years before the war the total average tonnage of shipping throughout the world was three million tons. Several million tons have been destroyed during the war by mines, by submarines, by wrecks, and by accidents, and in addition nearly every ocean going steamship plying along the trade routes is practically worn out because there has not been time to lay up for repairs owing o the urgent necessities of transportation. The United States has seen the necessity of taking action of this kind, and the Underwood Tariff Bill, which was passed in 1906, I think, made provision for the encouragement of the use of American ports and bottoms owned by or registered in the United States. By that Bill, provision was made that all goods imported into American ports in American bottoms should receive a discount of 5 per cent on the customs duty.

Hon. Mr. Richardson: They did not get it.

Hon. Mr. Nicholls: The provision is on he statute book. Perhaps the honourable member from Kingston can tell me whether that has been repealed or has not been put into effect.

Hon. Mr. Richardson: It was put into court and has been kept there for the last two or three years, and has not become effective.

Hon. Mr. Nicholls: I cite it as an evidence that the leading men of hat country thought it necessary to make that provision in order to encourage the use of American ports and bottoms; and if the first attempt was no successful, I have no doubt it will be followed up by some other method that will succeed. But I may show in another way that the United Sta es is fully seized of the importance to American trade of providing facilities for overseas traffic in its wn bo toms. General Goethals, one of the leading engineers of the United States, the chief engineer for the construction of the Panama canal, says:

A big beginning has been made, with both wooden and steel construction. Contracts have been let for 348 wooden ships, with a total tonnage of 1,218,000, and negotiations are under way for 100 more of these vessels. Contracts have also been let for 77 steel ships, with a tonnage of 643,800. Thus work is now in progress on 425 vessels, with a tonnage of 1,861,800, and the full programme contemplates the production of more than three million tons within eight months.

Hon Mr. Casgrain: Are those wooden vessels

Hon. Mr. Nicholls: Wooden and steel. I may tell you that during the first six months of this current year, 1917, ship-building companies in the United S ates have been incorporated with an aggregate capital of $200,000,000; yet Canada's effort has been the letting of a few contrac s for woden ships for war purposes, and which are not even to be owned in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Casgrain: Why will they not be owned in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Nicholls: Because they are sold to the British Government and have been registered in Great Br tain. To show the facilities we have the tonnage of the port of Montreal alone was three millions in 1900, six and one-half millions in 1910, and nine millions in 1914. These figures show that we have the facili ies if we had our own ships. I am quoting Montreal as the principal port; but any gentleman can easily get the figures of the o her ports, which mount up very largely. The harbour elevators in Montreal handled, in 1907, one million bushels of grain; in 1908, nine millions; in 1909, twelve millions; in 1911, twenty-one millions; in 1912, twenty-six millions; in 1913, forty-four millions; in 1914, the year before the war, sixty-two millions of bushels. From these figures honourable gentlemen will see tha the government has not been backward in well-doing so far as concerns the providing of facilities for handling the trade; but provision was not \ e to prevent that trade from being handled almost entirely by foreign interests. The point I am trying to make is that the attention of the Government should be ca l d to the necessi y of co-ordination between our inland system and our overseas system. In 1913 I was one of a deputation tha waited on the Government and presented a memorial, two paragraphs of which I will read:

Canada is so placed between Europe and he Far East that she should be able, if her land and water transportation systems were well developed and skilfully combined, to add to her other commercial advantages an immense carrying trade between those two enormous masses of population. As long, however, as the Canadian transporta ion system is weak on its water side this possibility cannot be realized.

What Canada Loses.

Apart from this the atrophy of the Canadian marine d-prives the country of profits a once possible and immense; and in addition, inflicts positive and severe loss. Including allied and subsidiary interests not far short of 200,000 persons draw pay from the railway industry of Canada; that is, not far short of a million Canadians are supported by it. Thus not only do the producers of Canada get their goods carried, but the carriage of those goods greatly increases their home market. Further, the producers have under substantial control the rates at and conditions under which their goods are carried; and they value this control highly.

Using Non-Canadian Ports and non-Canadian Ships.

Compare with this he marine carriage of Canadian goods. It is very largely done by non-Canadians. On the Great Lakes Canadian shipping amounts to a contemptible fraction of the total bulk of tonnage afloa . On the ocean Canadian ships in 1911-12 carried only about one million out of nine million tons carried to and from Canadian ports; and in addition huge quanti ies of Canadian goods had passed through American ports. We are using non-Canadian ports and non-Canadian ships. Canadians pay from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000 yearly in ocean freight rates and these almos olly go to outsiders; compare what we get in increased development, in increased home markets from the $150,000,000 which Canadians pay annually in railway freight rates. Associated with this is entire lack of control of water transpor ation rates. At the moment when a powerful effort is being made to force the railways to lower heir rates, ocean rates are shooting up with scarcely a word of comment."

In our railway freight rates on land transportation we have the public protected by means of the Dominion Railway Commission; but the whole value of that protection may be destroyed if, after carrying our produce over lines that have cost the country hundreds of millions of dollars, and delivering it at Canadian national ports that have also cost Canada additional hundreds of millions, we are forced to abide by whatever rate the foreign ship-owner chooses to charge us in order to get our goods to market. It is for that reason that I claim that greater attention should be given to the co-ordination of land and ocean transportation, and until that co-ordination is effected, we can never be a successful exporting country.

The honourable gentleman who introduced this motion did not suggest any remedy, and of course I am not going to make any suggestion. I shall [illegible] and to this [illegible] I am now going to deal with might be a means of providing a remedy. Mr. J. A. Farrell, the president of the United States Steel Corporation, the largest commercial corporation in the world recently presided at the National Foreign Trade Convention of the United States, and in closing he used these words:

In sober truth the secret of this co-operation, "Greater prosperity through greater foreign trade," might with entire correctness be made to read "No enduring prosperity without foreign trade."

Neither can we have foreign trade unless we secure such co-ordination between our land transportation and our oceangoing transportation as will enable us at least in a measure, to compete with the subsidized overseas traffic of Germany and other competing nations. The suggestion I would make as to a method that might, at all events assist in alleviating the evil complained of, would be the passage of an act similar to the Shipping Bill passed in the United States in 1915. That Act created the Shipping Board somewhat in the lines of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and appropriated million dollars for the purpose tablishing lines of shipping by ing subsidies, and in other way do not refer to the question of ing subsidies so much as to the value that a Shipping Board be, if for no other purpose th gather information, to make re mendations and to make some effort to overcome the evil me ed. I think all of us will admit the Dominion Railway Board been of great benefit to the peo this country and I believe tha railways themselves, who we first averse to its appointment, admit that that board by its ness, has been of great benefit railways themselves as well as people.

HOME DEFENCE

The safeguarding of your home and all it means to you is not a matter of armies and ships alone. The comfort and happiness of your family are exposed to the attacks of enemies much nearer to them than the marauding Huns of Central Europe.

What will become of your home and your wife and your children, if you be suddenly stricken down as thousands of others have been?

Will there be any bulwark of defence to keep the home and the family from destruction?

You can most easily provide such a line of defence by means of a life assurance policy. Home Defence is its purpose and it fulfills that purpose as nothing else can.

American Convoys Reduce The Losses From Submarines

Washington, August 31.—American naval forces are convoying merchant craft across the Atlantic, it was disclosed officially to-day at the navy department, and examination of the records show that the loss of convoyed ships by submarines has averaged less than one-half of one per cent.

Details of the convoy system are withheld. It was stated, however, that American war vessels are regularly escorting fleets of British, French or other allied merchantmen across, the protection being supplemented when the danger zone is reached by the destroyers and other patrol craft.

American naval officials believe that an effective system for checking the submarine menace is being built up gradually, but certainly. Many devices and many methods enter into the task. Among other things depth bombs are proving effective. Official reports indicate that American destroyers have accounted for several U-Boats with these weapons. No announcements of such incidents will be made, however, unless absolute proof of this fact is available.

No U-boat has been captured by the Americans. It is the best judgment of high officials, however, that several have been sunk by Admiral Sims' destroyers, and they are confident to-day, more confident than ever before, that the submarine menace will be substantially abated as the number of destroyers and other craft available for the work is increased.

The effect of the increasing patrol of the employment of airplanes and of the addition of new devices to the anti-submarine weapons has been to force the U-boats under water for a greater and greater degree. Their effectiveness is limited in proportion. They cannot run down a merchant ship of average speed if kept under the water. They can operate only against ships that almost stumble upon them. And all the time they are under water they are consuming the stored power of their storage batteries, decreasing their range of underwater action and compelling them to come up at night and lie idle on the surface while their oil engines are used to recharge the batteries.

The decision of the navy department to spend $36,000,000 on new destroyers and destroyer building facilities, approved yesterday by President Wilson, is based on the effectiveness of the swift fighting machines as proven by Admiral Sims' forces. Every effort to speed the new programme as well as the old will be made and during the next year the American destroyer force in European waters probably can be more than doubled. Destroyers now under construction are being rushed to completion and reports on progress are satisfactory.

Business College On Higher Plane Than Ever Before

Present Highly Efficient Staff is Being Increased—Gregg System Introduced

Peterborough Business College is being placed on a higher plane than ever this year. The present highly efficient staff is being increased, and it goes without saying that the added help is of the highest available talent.

Another progressive feature of the establishment is the introduction of the Gregg system of shorthand. This style of quick notation of words, is now the almost universal system in use in the United States. It was started about fifteen years ago, and in that time has demonstrated its usefulness to such a degree that to speak of shorthand now means Gregg shorthand. It is "easy to learn," "easy to read," and "easy to write."

Pupils who will now have this system taught to them are to be congratulated, as they become more valuable to their future employees as they perfect themselves in its use.

The College starts its fall and winter term under most favourable conditions. The interest shown by the young people in being prepared for a business life is getting more manifest and this term promises to tax the College facilities to its capacity.

SAVE THE CHILDREN

Mothers who keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house may feel that the lives of their little ones are reasonably safe during the hot weather. Stomach troubles, cholera infantum and diarrhoea carry off thousands of little ones every summer, in most cases because the mother does not have a safe medicine at hand to give promptly. Baby's Own Tablets cur these troubles, or if given occasionally to the well child will prevent their coming on. The Tablets are guaranteed by a government analyst to be absolutely harmless even to the newborn babe. They are especially good in summer because they regulate the bowels and keep the stomach sweet and pure. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Wil-

WHAT NEXT?

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Our city since August, 1914, has been fairly active and prosperous. Many of our young men responded to the bugle call, enlisted and went to the front to fight the aggressive Germans in their onslaught against the rights and liberties of the world. The demand for ammunitions started the manufacture of shells and other war supplies and hundreds of outsiders have come into town, lured by the high wages, so that financially the war has not hurt us up to the present, but what of the future? The men who have been getting six or seven dollars a day won't want to work for one dollar and a half or two dollars a day, but if there is not plenty of work what will they do? Wages must go down and the prices of foods will also go down. So there will be an unsettled condition and it will take a year or two to settle down to normal conditions.

There is little or no building at present: labour is high, building materials are excessively high. Rents are very high and they won't go down because the man who owns the house must have fair rents to enable him to get from his property enough to enable him to pay the wear and tear, painting, papering, shingling, insurance, taxes, etc., and at least 6 per cent. net out of his property.

The capitalist who can get 6 per cent. out of War Loan Bonds without any trouble will prefer them to house property as it is at present, yet rents must go up or the scarcity of houses will continue. This is the time for the man who wants a home to buy as he can buy much cheaper than he can build at present or future cost of labour and material. If our Street Railways are extended very much desirable property will come into the market that is now a little too far from the centre of the city. In fact our finest building property is now in our suburbs. Here one can get sweetness and light, a little elbow-room and a cabbage patch. Our best schools are in the suburbs, so that there is no difficulty about them, they are situate in the east, west, north and south of the city, evidently so placed to accommodate the growing needs of the city. There is much good city property in the market at prices based on original cost, these can be bought at less than the improvement can be put on the land for.

If the people who have been getting the big wages during the war time are wise now is their chance to put their money in homes for themselves. This plan will give them a local habitation and be for them a savings bank and a citizenship in a most prosperous and beautiful little city. The man who owns his home has a better status in the country than a shifting, shiftless tenant.

A trifle added to the rents payable will will pay for a home, operate as a savings bank, raise the enjoyment of life and educate in savings habits and greatly improve the life and happiness of the family.

CIVIS.

This year there are in South Africa as nearly as can be estimated, 31,421,690 sheep and 8,920,270 goats.

LINES ON DEATH OF PTE. P. COOPER OF WARSAW

Following is an extract from a letter received by Mrs. John Cooper from Pte. Joseph Jamieson who has since been killed. Pte. Jamieson was a brother of Miss Agnes Jamieson of Cobourg, formerly of this place.

Dear Mrs. Cooper,—Just a few lines to let you know that I received your letter O.K. and was glad to hear from you. You ask me if I was beside our son when he fell. No, Mrs. Cooper, I was not, but not long after I was walking over the battlefield looking over some of the bodies and I came to poor Percy. Well, I hardly knew just what to do, but I got all his things with the exception of his bank-book, which we are not allowed to touch, so I sent you his photos. As to the nature of his death. He was shot through the breast. You certainly have my sympathy for Percy was my best chum and thank God he has done his bit. I pray God will spare me to get back so that I may see you all and I shall not forget to call and see you and will be able to tell you more about him. I remain,

Ever your friend,
JOSEPH A. JAMIESON.

KILLED IN ACTION.

Respectfully inscribed to Mrs. John Cooper on the death of her son, Pte. Percy Cooper.

How vacant is his place,
No more his dear, loved face,
Still bright with boyhood's grace,
Shall ye behold.
Dim are the smiling eyes,
And 'neath far foreign skies,
In a red grave he lies,
Pallid and cold.

Not by slow, wasting blight,
But in the thick of fight,
For country, king and right,
Nobly he fell.
Where booming cannons roared,
And a fierce, Teuton horde,
A deadly torrent poured,
Of shrapnel shell.

Then dry those bitter tears;
Soon life's few troublous years,
Beset with cares and fears,
Will pass away.
And ye shall meet again,
Where parting, death and pain
Come not for aye.

Better at duty's call
For freedom's cause to fall,
'Ere grief has turned to gall
Joy's chalice fair.
When hope's bright dream is flown,
Friends gone, or faithless grown,
And Heaven's sweet love alone,
Saves from despair.

Tho' o'er that barren sod
No gentle lilies nod,
The watchful hosts of God
Ward ever keep.
Sweet as in church-yard bed,
'Mid Warsaw's peaceful dead,
Proud marble at his head,
Shall be his sleep.
Weep not, with drooping head,
As they whose hope is fled,
Rather rejoice, instead,
That he has won.
Rest, 'ere the shadows grey,
And full reward, as they
Who bear the toilsome day,
Till set of sun.

There on the gory sand
Of no man's lonely land
A simple cross will stand
'Neath the blue sky,
Bearing the soldier's name
From Canada who came
With patriot heart aflame
For her to die.

Well Warsaw proudly may,
Though mournfully to-day,
A grateful tribute pay,
And honours bright.
To her young soldier brave,
His life who nobly gave,
And fills a hero's grave
At Vimy Height.

Mrs. A. F. Calder.

Many Children Die From Summer Complaint

When They Could Be Saved by Using

DR. FOWLER'S

Extract of Wild Strawberry

There is not a Summer passes without thousands of people, especially infants, being attacked by Summer Complaint.

The prostration, often verging on collapse, which sometimes accompanies this disease makes it one of the most serious and dangerous we have to contend with during the hot months.

A remedy which will quickly offset the vomiting, purging and the profuse diarrhoea is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Mrs. Thomas M. Theriault, Grand Anse, N.B., writes: "My three children were very sick with Summer Complaint during the hot days last Summer. I thought one day that they would die, and I didn't know what to do to cure them. I happened to have one of your almanacs in the house, and found by reading about Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry that it was a good remedy. I at once got two bottles, and they perfectly cured them. I recommend everybody to use this wonderful remedy."

It has been on the market for the past 72 years.

You don't experiment when you buy it.

Hon. Senator Nicholls' Speech

Hon. Mr. Casgrain: Hear, hear; that was a Liberal measure.

Hon. Mr. Nicholls: If we were to institute a Shipping Board that would take up this whole question and co-ordinate the rates between overseas and inland transportation so that we could get through rates not only for all the produce, the wheat and the coarse grains, that we expect to export, but for manufactures and everything else, Canada might feel that she was able to enter into competition with the cargoes of the world. No country in the world has ever done so much as Canada, with her small population, on the northern half of this continent; but there is plenty of room for us to do more, and here is the way in which we can help ourselves, help the country and help the Empire.

Hon. Mr. Casgrain: The honourable gentleman said that ships were now being built in Canada for British register and that they would not be Canadian ships although built with money supplied by the Canadian government; is that right?

Hon. Mr. Nicholls: So far as my understanding goes, those ships have been ordered by the Imperial government through the Imperial Munition Board, and they are being sold to Great Britain in the same manner as we are selling munitions, and when they are delivered on the other side they are no longer our property.

Hon. Mr. Casgrain: But we advanced the money for them?

Rules To Govern Exemption Cases

FIX THE LOCAL TRIBUNALS.

Period Set in which Application Must be Made Against Service.

Ottawa, August 31.—At a meeting of the Advisory Council for the application of the Military Service Act, held at the offices of the Minister of Justice, E. L. Newcombe, Deputy Minister of Justice; O. W. Biggar, of Edmonton; John Moss, K.C., of Toronto; and Lieut.-Col. Machin, of Kenora, reviewed the draft regulations, governing exemptions. The members of the council advanced several valuable suggestions with a view to facilitating the application of the Act, setting forth in further detail the grounds of exemption. Meetings of the Advisory Council will be held from day to day until the regulations are fully completed. Mr. L. J. Loranger, K.C., of Montreal, is likely to be added to the board.

The work of locating the local tribunals has progressed to the extent that all the places where such tribunals are to meet have been fixed for several of the provinces. In the larger cities a unit of 7,500 of the population was fixed for each local tribunal but it is possible that in some cities the municipal ward may be adopted as the unit for tribunals.

When the proclamation is issued ordering men from 20 to 34 years of age to report for military service or to claim exemption a certain period will be allowed to make application for exemption. Those who do not within that period make application for exemption will forfeit all claim to exemption.

MR. GEORGE B. WILSON HONOURED BY THE FOREMAN OF THE C.G.E. CO.

Presented With An Address and Remembrances Last Night on the Eve of His Departure to the Head Office in Toronto.

A PLEASANT EVENING

A gathering of a department heads, foremen and other officials of the Canadian General Electric Company at the Empress Hotel last night paid a parting honour to Mr. George B. Wilson who, after serving as foreman of the main test has been appointed to the head office in Toronto. It was a happy occasion, subdued by an undertone of regret at the termination of association with Mr. Wilson whose popularity was the spirit and the substance of the tributes accorded him last night.

Mr. W. S. Campbell proved a happy choice as the presiding "foreman." On behalf of the test department Mr. D. J. Roche presented Mr. Wilson with a club bag and the department heads gave him a diamond pin accompanying the following address:

Dear Mr. Wilson,—We have learned that after serving eight years with this company you have conducted yourself and your department, that your achievements have merited the attention of the management and that your experiences, energy and ability are being rewarded by promotion.

You have been what some foremet remarked, a "live wire" among us. You have taken a keen interest in social life and the general improvement of the environments in which we live.

You have shown yourself a true lover of sports, always assisting in any movement in connection with such, and voluntarily backing it up financially.

You have cultivated a large heart filled with sympathy and respect for your fellow employees. Your efforts were untiring in the relief of cases of distress among the employees and many a widow and orphan have been assisted, which directly resulted from your personal activities.

Now Mr. Wilson, we would have you believe that "no man liveth to himself." Our happy associations have resulted beneficially to all of us and we have great pleasure in sharing the pride which you naturally must feel in conjunction with your new appointment. We have every confidence in you to direct your business course in a manner that will further commance the respect of your head office associates, and the management of the corporation which you have the honour to represent.

To cement our highst regards for you we beg you to accept this diamond pin as a lasting token. May its brightness ever cheer you through life and its reflection ever remind you of the happy associations of the past.

To Mrs. Wilson and family we present our hearty congratulations accompanied by abundance of good wishes. Sorry to part.

Very respectfully yours
William J. Nelson, Chairman.
John G. Wilson, Secretary.

For committee representing Heads of Departments, Sections, Foremen and Office Staffs.

Mr. Wilson made a fine reply in acknowledging the tributes paid him and in appreciating the association with the foremen in the every day affairs at the C.G.E. plant.

Other short addresses followed, interspersed by musical numbers contributed by Mr. R. J. Devey, Mr. Walter Evans and Mr. Cowie.

Family Jewelry Lost With Valise On A Smith Road

A complaint by Miss Mary Campbell of Woodstock of a loss of a travelling bag and parcel on her way from South Beach in the evening of Sunday, August 19th, was investigated yesterday by Provincial Inspector Reburn of the Criminal Investigation Department, assisted by High County Constable Moore. They learned that the articles were strapped on the running board of the automobile in which the trip to Peterborough was made. A grip and shawl roll comprised the luggage. The Inspector's search yesterday located the latter article. It had been picked up on the road near the Young's Point cheese factory that night about 9.30 o'clock by Mr. Emory, a short time after the car must have passed that point. The loss was advertised in the Examiner, but was erroneously mentioned as having occurred in Douro. The parcel was found on the Smith side of the river and Inspector Reburn concluded that the grip has also become loosened from its ties and had fallen on to the road. No trace of it has been found and its retension hereafter will constitute a criminal oence. The Inspector stated whoever had found it should at once report to County Constable Moore and thereby safeguard themselves against a serious charge.

The grip or valise contained among other personal effects certain pieces of jewelry which were heirlooms in Miss Campbell's family and highly valued by her.

CHILDREN AND OLD FOLKS INVITED TO S. A. FIELD DAY

The children from the Children's Aid Society Shelter have been invited to the Salvation Army Field Day at Nicholl's Oval on Monday as well as the old folks from the Protestant Home and will be sent for with automobiles. All the children of the Temple Sunday School up to 12 years of age will be given their tea free at the banquet on Monday night at the Temple. A variety programme is promised for Monday night and Brigadier Morehen will be the chairman. Everybody who comes to the Oval or the banquet or the concert will be made welcome.

BARBERS SUGGEST 35 CENT HAIR CUT

There is a proposal among local barbers to fix the Saturday night closing hour at 10 o'clock, an hour earlier than at present and to raise the price of hair cuts from twenty-five to thirty-five cents. The reason ascribed for the latter suggestion are of the same economic character that has been behind most of the increases demanded and received by workers during the past two years. Hair cuts, whether "trims" or "prisons" are to-day no dearer than they were before the war, but barbers state that all their expenses are higher. Consequently they regard themselves entitled to higher receipts in order that they may meet the increasd demands.

BOUGHT PINE WOODS.

Mr. H. G. Buck has purchased a quantity of pine woods on the Richardson property north of Hastings. The men are now engaged in cutting and hauling the timber to the box factory where it will be used in heading. The motor truck, which Mr. Buck recently purchased, has been utilized in hauling the logs and does the work of about three teams.—Norwood Register.

SEEMS EVERYONE HEARD ABOUT IT

All Want to try new drug that dries up corns so they lift out

Good news spreads rapidly and druggists here are kept busy dispensing freezone, the ether discovery of a Cincinnati man, which is said to loosen any corn so it lifts out with the fingers.

Ask at any pharmacy for a quarter ounce of freezone, which will cost very little, but is said to be sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus.

You apply just a few drops on the tender, aching corn and instantly the soreness is relieved, and soon the corn is so shriveled that it lifts out without pain. It is a sticky substance which dries when applied and never inflames or even irritates the adjoining tissue.

This discovery will present thousands of deaths annually from lockjaw and infection heretofore resulting from the suicidal habit of cutting corns.

OVER 15,000 RETURNING.

There are 9,000 Patients in Military Hospitals in Canada.

WINNIPEG, Aug 31.—S. A. Armstrong director of military hospitals states that at least 15,000 wounded and physically unfit Canadian soldiers are expected to return within the next six months. He adds that official figures show there are 9,000 patients in the sixty military hospitals in Canada. There are approximately 1,200 men discharged from the service every month.

THE POPE TO CONTINUE PEACE EFFORTS

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31. — Pope Benedict will launch formal feelers to further the ends of peace, according to confidential advices received in diplomatic quarters to-day. The first effort will be made along the following lines, according to these advices, restoration of Belgium, repayment for wrongs suffered, permission to have a German garrison remain at Antwerp, granting autonomy to Lorraine, leaving Alsace in German hands; making Trieste a port outside of Italian jurisdiction, leaving the Balkan question to the peace conference, but that Bosni and Herzegovina remain Austrian territory. The Pope will not go into the question of restoration for Roumania, Serbia and Mntenegro, believing them to come under the general peace negotiations bearing on the Balkans. The State Department has seen no word indicating that the Pope intends to make any new proposals with a view of further peace negotiations.

Mr. G. L. Galley Has Resigned As "Y" Boys' Secretary

Mr. Garnet L. Galley, whose resignation of the position of Boys' Secretary of the local Y.M.C.A. took effect to-day, has established an enviable record during his long connection with the Association. He has held his latest post for four years and four months, the results of which bear evidence of the success of his efforts. Under his direction the Boys' Department membership has grown from 149 to 885; not only in numbers but in the character of the work has this department flourished. Mr. Galley established the standard efficiency tests among the Y.M.C.A. boys, and organized the various groups in the churches. Those who comprehend the scope and the influence of these tests with 'teenage' boys will readily appreciate what has been done to assist in the moulding of their character upon a four square basis. Educational lectures by competent local authorities, and trips to the factories wer also features of Mr. Galley's methods of building up the boys who had been entrusted to his care. By these and other means he sought to improve them on the mental side; but the Y.M.C.A. symbol of the triangular group of mind, spirit and body, demanded the broadest activities. Hence, to advance the boys spiritually Mr. Galley conducted their Bible class, encouraged them to attend the annual conference and by other means assisted them in this direction and incidentally providing a training that has made for leadership in church work and should be an accumulative influence. Mr. Galley also encouraged the physical development of the boys in hikes and by other means apart from the gymnasium. During the past summer he undertook the boys' farm and garden work, and assisted the Organization of Recources Committee by placing and visiting boys who had engaged with farmers, and also by visiting the schools throughout this district in connection with enlisting boys for the greater production campaign. In these and other kindred activities Mr. Galley has shown himself a capable and trustworthy leader, with a talent for organization and possessing those qualities that make friends and win confidence.

Previous to assuming the Peterborough Boys' secretaryship, Mr. Galley was physical director of the "Y" at Port Hope, and acted as general secretary and physical director at Peterborough for a time. He joined the local association when he was ten years old, has been on all the committees, and was a member of the Directorate for three years. His resignation leaves a vacancy that will not be easily filed.

PRESENTATION TO MR. C. COLEMAN

The Pioneer and Labour Journal, published in England, has the following interesting reference to a presentation made to Mr. Chas. Coleman, of Peterborough:

"A presentation to Mr. C. Coleman was made in K6, Field Gun Section, Royal Gun Factory, Woolwich Arsenal. The chairman, Mr. A. Scott, before calling upon Mr. Hilbert, foreman to make the presentation said that Mr. Coleman had volunteered his services in Canada to come to England to "do his bit," leaving his family and business, to which he was about to return after fulfilling his contract with the Government.

Mr. Hilbert in making the presentation spoke highly of the services Mr. Coleman had rendered to his country. He would miss him as a workman, and also as leader of the famous quartette, which had given so much pleasure to his fellow workers in the past. In asking Mr. Coleman to accept the presentation, which consisted of a cigarette case and loving cups, he said that the presentation carried with it the esteem and respect of the mall and that they wished him God-speed and a safe journey.

Mr. Coleman after thanking the Chairman, Mr. Hilbert and shopmates said that although he would soon be many thousands of miles away, he would never forget the many friends he left behind in old England.

The meeting closed with Mr. Coleman singing "Never Let the Old Flag Fall" after which he was accorded three cheers.

Over 300 Ford Cars Sold This Year in This District

NEW FORD CARS AND PRICE

Notwithstanding the increasing cost of material and labour, Ford prices are the same,—at present.

But no one can definitely say how soon or how much Ford prices will rise. That they will advance is almost dead sure. Every known conditions point to certain increases in motor car material.

So, buy your Ford to-day. Then you'll save any added price that may be asked in the near future.

We are accepting orders for Ford cars at the price, $495, for immediate and spring delivery —only to the number of cars we may have in stock from time to time.

The reason Fords can still be sold at the same price to-day, is because they are built from material contracted for last fall, when prices were lower than they are to-day.

Most all other cars have advanced in price. Many makers have made two advances within the year. But the Ford still stays the same.

Of all the good values now offered in the automobile market, the Ford at $495 is by long odds the greatest.

Sunday Sermon For Those Who Do Not Go To Church

(By JAS. SUTHERLAND)

St. Matthew. 6 Chap. 27th Verse. Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit to his stature, which of you, the wisest, the strongest, the best of you cannot add one cubit to his stature, the growing age is the thoughtless age, the careless and indifferent season of youth, yet we grow and we are provided by God with the blessings of this life, and shall not He who reared us, supply all our needed wants. So we must be reconciled to our condition in life, and make the best of the opportunities that God has placed within our reach and work out life's problem, with fear and trembling, trusting God and working with him. We cannot alter the dispensations of Providence. Anxiety about the world is unbecoming in a Christian and has a bad influence. Worldly persons seek these things with care and anxiety, because they are unacquainted with spiritual and divine things and do not understand them, but it is a shame for Christians who build upon nobler principles, to do so. The life of the soul, eternal happiness, is the one thing needful about which we should employ our thoughts, but which is too often neglected in those hearts occupied by worldly cares—thoughtfulness about our souls is the most effectual care for anxious cares about the world. Christ says to us all: Seek first the Kingdom of God and make religion your business and all needed things will be added to it. This is the great duty Christ requires of us, to seek first His Kingdom, the first thing first; mind religion and make it your principal concern. We are to seek the blessings that Christ has to bestow, by repentance, by faith and in the means of grace as our first object, desiring to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. Our bountiful Father will add to us all things that pertain to our present life without our anxious thoughts and cares. The next day may never arrive to any of us, but if it does, God will send its supplies with it. Surely this is a merciful arrangement of our Heavenly Father. He knows that everyday brings more or less suffering and trials with it, sometimes even more than we are able to bear, but he allows and commands us to cast all our cares upon him, knowing that he careth for us. If we will load ourselves with a heavy burden, which he does not lay upon us, we torment ourselves and dishonour God by our folly and unbelief. We need to be led and guided and to pray to Him continually, to increase our faith. Then all these rules and precepts of our gracious Lord will be known by experience to conduce to our present comfort as well as to our future benefit. We have those troubles and trials to help to keep us in the narrow way. We are naturally prone to wander away from God, and like lost sheep we follow our own way, and those things seem to stop us in the sinful way God uses to bring us back to Him again. Then the sprit reveals and shows us our duty and under a deep sense of his purity we do our works unto Him who seeth in secret who shall reward us openly. Further on in Christ's discourse on prayer He had spoken of prayer as a command duty, here He speaks of it as the appointed means of obtaining what we need, especially grace to obey the precepts He had given. Pray with sincerity, pray often, make conscence of prayer and be constant in it, make a business of prayer and be earnest in it; ask as a beggar asks alms; ask, represent your wants and burdens to God and claim His promises. Ask as a traveller asks the way, to pray is to inquire of God. Ezekiel 36-37. Seek as for a thing of value that we have lost, or as the merchant man that seeks goodly pearls. Knock as he that desires to enter into the house knocks at the door. We would be admitted to converse with God, would be taken into His love, favour, and Kingdom. Sin has shut and closed the door against us. By prayer we knock Lord, Lord, open to us. We must not only ask, but seek in the appointed means, seek for that which we ask for—else we tempt God. God gives knowledge and grace to those who search the Scriptures, and wait at wisdom's gates; he gives power against sin, to those that avoid the occasions of it. We must not only ask but knock, must ask importunately; plead and wrestle with God, like Jacob at Peniel, seek diligently, continue knocking, persevere in prayer, and in use of means. Here are promises annexed, our labour in prayer shall not be in vain. Ask and it shall be given you, not lent, not sold, but given you. Whatever you pray for, according to the promise, shall be given you if God sees it fit for you, and what would you have more. Ye have not because ye ask not, or ask not aright. Seek and ye shall find, God loves those who seek him; knock and it shall be opened, the door of mercy and grace shall be opened to you as friends and guests. This promise is made to extend to all that pray aright; every one that asketh receiveth, whether Jew or Gentile, young or old, rich or poor, high or low, master or servant, learned or unlearned, they are all alike welcome to the throne of grace if they come in faith. By faith applying and appropriating the promise we are actually interested and invested in the good promised. So sure are the promises of God, that they give present possession. Christ hereby puts his assent to the petition, He having all power in Heaven and in earth. It is illustrated by a similitude taken from earthly parents, and their readiness to give their children what they ask. Now this is of use to direct our prayers; we must come to God as children to a father in heaven with reverence and confidence. How naturally does the child, when in want or distress, go to the parents for help or relief. We must come to him for goodthings for those he gives to them that ask him, which teaches us to refer ourselves to him. We know not what is good for ourselves. Eccle, 6-12, but he knows what is good for us. We must therefore leave it with him. We often ask God what would do us hurt, herefore we must submit to the divine will. Denials in love is better than grants in anzer—it would have been ill for us if all our requests had been answered God has assumed the relation of a father to us, and owns us for his children. Whatever love parents have for their families, God has implanted it in them. Parents are often foolishly fond of their children like Eli and David—but God is wise— he knows what we need, what we desire, and what is fit for us. God is more kind. If all the compassions, of all the tender fathers in the world were gathered into one—yet compared with the tender mercies of God, they would be but as a drop to the ocean. Christ says not, he gives "to his children" least the supplicant should be hindered by fear that he was not one, but "to them that ask him" that the very act of asking might give assurance of being heard. We can never believe that our heavenly father would bid us pray, incline our hearts to do so, and then refuse to hear, or give us what would be hurtful instead of the bread of Life and the blessings of salvation. So let us come with boldness to the throne, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help us in every time of need.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES SUTHERLAND.

Ancient Foresters Overseas Are Carried Free

Fund For That Purpose Created By Those at Home

BRANTFORD, Aug. 30.—A. Webber of Winnipeg, was elected as the new High Chief Ranger at to-day's session of the High Court convention of the Ancient Order of Foresters. Next year's meeting place will probably be St. Catharines. W. Williams of Toronto, who was retiring as Secretary, was made Secretary emeritus at a superannuation salary of $1,000 a year. The Laws Committee was reduced from five members to three. Dr. E. R. Secord, who was elected Medical Examiner by acclamation, had a high tribute paid his work.

All members of the Ancient Order of Foresters overseas will be carried by the order free of any charge what soever, and in order that this decision may be successfully carried out a fund has been established to which each member of the order at home will contribute the sum of one dollar a year.

The election of officers resulted as follows: High Chief Ranger, A. Webber, Winnipeg; High Sub Chief Ranger Hugh McPherson, London; Permanent Secretary, A Martin; High Court Treasurer, H. C. Willson, Toronto, (acclamation) High Court Medical Examiner, Dr. E. R. Secord, Brantford (acclamation); High Court Senior Woodward, A. R. Wickett, Toronto; High Court Junior Woodward, W. H. Goddard, Toronto.

The delegates were the guests of the city again this afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock, when they toured the length and breadth of the same by auto. Some fifty automobiles formed the procession, and left the Market Square sharp at the appointed time.

At this afternoon's session Percy W. Farnsworth of this city, was elected High Court Senior Beadle, and A. Dynes of Hamilton, High Court Junior Beadle.

FARMERS—
Protect Your Interests

There is great danger from fire during the threshing season. We respectfully offer the following suggestions as precautionary measures:

1.—Use coal as fuel if possible.
2.—Do not thresh when a heavy wind blows directly into your barn.
3.—Be sure that an adequate supply of water is close at hand in accordance with the conditions of your insurance policy.
4.—See that the engine is at least 20 feet from the nearest building or stack.
5.—When stopped during meal time see to it that a competent person is left in charge of the engine with plenty of water at hand.
6.—Allow no smoking about your buildings at any time.
7.—Remember that any thresher not using a proper screen or spark arrester is liable to imprisonment and fine.

By keeping these points in mind you may save yourself and the Company heavy loss.

Would not be Without Zutoo Tablets
At Any Cost

Such is the statement of Mr. A. O. Norton, of Boston, the largest Jack Manufacturer in the world. His voluntary testimonial regarding ZUTOO follows:

286 Congress St., Boston, Mass.

"I have been a sufferer from Headache since childhood and have used all, or nearly all the so-called 'cures' on the market. Some months since my attention was called to Zutoo Tablets and I have been using them ever since with the most gratifying results. I find they cure a 'sick' or 'nervous' headache in a few minutes and leave no bad effects. My family use them whenever needed with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from Headache and they never failed to give quick relief. I always carry Zutoo Tablets in my grip on the road and WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT THEM AT ANY COST."

COSTLY TRIAL IN ALASKA.

Witnesses in Murder Case May Remain All Winter.

SEWARD, Alaska, Aug. 31.—Efforts were being made to-day to bring to an end by Monday the trial began yesterday of A. F. McLean, a Government teacher at Nushagak, Bristol Bay, charged with the murder, Jan. 2, 1916, of his native wife.

Some of the witnesses brought from Bristol Bay would be compelled to remain this winter if the trial is not ended by Monday when a steamer leaves. The trial promises to be the most expensive in the history of the territory.

CHRISTIE'S BISCUITS

Christie Brown & Co. Make Unique Exhibit.

Every year Christie Brown & Co. have a splendid showing in the Manufacturers' Building, and this year their exhibit is even more interesting than ever.

The world-famous Company has had designed a booth distinct from all others. As far as appearance is concerned, it is purely and simply a neat and attractive corner grocery shop of most modern design. Within tier after tier along the walls, are the new display containers for the almost innumerable lines of biscuits manufactured by this company. The booth has proved particularly attractive to the retail trade, and the officials of the Company, who have charge of the exhibit, are daily meeting hundreds of retailers who handle these famous lines of pure food.

HONEST MERCHANDIZING.

When a merchant weighs your purchases on a Toledo scale you are sure of honest weight as there are NO springs or other contrivances to cause incorrect weight.

The exhibits in the Manufacturers' Building and also in the Machinery Hall have again demonstrated their superiority over all others. More Toledo Scales are built in Canada by Canadian workmen than all other computing scales companies combined.

HAIR NEEDS AT THE PEMBER STORE.

Exhibition visitors will find at the Pember Store, 129 Yonge street, transformations of excellent quality and design; "La Natural" with side or centre part; Pompadours, Waves, and Switches of supreme excellence; and all at reasonable prices.

Toupees for Men.

The toupees made by W. T. Pember for men who wish to renew their health, are the closest imitations of the natural that can be produced. Light in weight, reasonable prices, and perfect satisfaction.—W. T. Pember, 129 Yonge street, Toronto.

NEWCOMBE PIANOS.

Standing out among the piano exhibits of the Exhibition of 1917 are those of the Newcombe Piano Company, Ltd., in the Manufacturers' Building. This firm supplied a piano to the late Queen Victoria, but still more indicative of their standing in the trade is the fact that they hold medals won in open competition in New Orleans in 1884 and 1885, in London, Eng.; in 1886, in Chicago in 1893, in Paris in 1900, and in Jamestown Va. in 1907. Their claim to consideration is that they put the same workmanship and finish into the run of the pianos as in the prize-winners. They have the only piano in Canada equipped with the patent tension rods at the back and are also showing the latest Player-Piano known to the trade.

Anyone unable to visit the Exhibition should write to Head Office of the Newcombe Piano Co., at 359 Yonge street, Toronto, for illustrated catalogues of pianos and players, or call upon the nearest representative of this old established company.

CECILIAN PLAYER PIANO AND "CONCERTPHONE"

For thirty-five years the Cecilian Company has been building up an enviable reputation in the United States and Canada. About three years ago the Company decided that their instruments should be "Made in Canada" and a factory was established in Toronto, where the famed Cecilian Piano and Player are both made.

The Cecilian Piano is unexcelled in tone and lasting qualities and the Cecilian Player stands in a class by itself as a Player which, owing to its marvellous construction and splendid control, has absolutely none of that mechanical sound so common in Player Pianos. In the Cecilian nothing is left to chance. Everything is of the best. All the tubing, valves, and vacuum chambers are made of metal (instead of wood and rubber) and so are absolutely independent of climatic conditions. In fact, the Cecilian is said to be the only Player action which will outlive the piano. The Cecilian Piano can be bought either with or without the Player, as it is so constructed that the Player can easily be added at any future time.

This Company is also now producing the Cecilian Concertphone," a gramophone made from the musician's point of view, and the result is a marvelous production. As it is fitted with ball-bearing producing arm it will play any record made, and the automatic stop on the instrument entirely eliminates blurring at the end of a recital. The Cecilian concertphone is a most human-like interpreter of tone and, like the Cecilian Player and Piano, will be found on exhibition in the Manufacturers' Building.

Daintily printed descriptive matter of the Cecilian instruments can be obtained at the exhibit or at the Company's Offices, 347 Yonge street, Toronto, and every music lover is invited to call or write for full information.

THOMPSON'S EXHIBITION RESTAURANTS

Thompson's Restaurants and lunch counters still maintain their high standard of quality. Those excellent steaks and chops look so appetizing, being cooked in plain view. The excellent quality and quick service, coupled with the same low prices maintained for the past twenty years, make Thompson's places the best place on the Exhibition Grounds to eat.

This same sword, the secret duel, and the theft of this beautiful young wife and curly-locked baby boy—all these were part of those by-gone days.

Mrs. McElhiney Tells Some Of Her Experiences

Peterboro's Police Matron Delivered An Address at Oshawa

The Oshawa Reformer says:

Last Sunday night Mrs. Adjt. McElhiney, Commissioned Police Woman and Police Matron of Peterborough, told a most touching story of her experiences as such at the Salvation Army Barracks here last Sunday night. She recalled the history of her conversion and her first commission as a mission worker in the segregated district in Toronto. She referred to the Winnipeg raids in which Dr. Shearer denounced a certain section of that city as the blackest spot on the face of the earth. Her husband had been stationed in Winnipeg at that time and had such conclusive proof of the wretched condition which then existed there that he was able to stand up in one of the theatres one Sunday and declare that notwithstanding the protests and denials of the local police and officials of the city, the conditions were even worse than Dr. Shearer had stated them to be. They had had a part in the cleaning up of the life of that city. In the City of Peterborough she was a duly commissioned Police Woman and Police Matron. In the course of her duties she had seen sin in its worst forms, but in almost every case found the love of God still smouldering in apparently the most wretched creatures. In the words of the well known hymn:

Down in the human heart crushed by the tempter,
Feelings lie buried that grace can restore,
Touched by a human hand, awakened by kindness,
Cords that were broken will vibrate once more.

In the cases of fallen women and girls she had found that many of them reformed and became good citizens when gotten hold of in the right way, touched by the Grace of God, and shown a little tenderness and sympathy. She told of one Peterborough girl in particular who had a notorious reputation and had been sentenced to two years in the penitentiary whom she had been privileged to help back to respectable life. She thought it was very unjust that when a girl or a woman went wrong they were despised and looked down upon, while the man, who had been just as guilty, was bolstered up by his fellows and his short-comings overlooked. She could not see any difference in sins of one kind or another. There was no underscoring of the commandments. God put no more emphasis upon "Thou shalt not covet thy ——." or "Thou shalt not bear false witness against they neighbour."

The speaker stated that it was her duty to appear at the Police Court, every morning and as an officer of the Salvation Army, as well as Police Woman she was able to speak a word of kindness to the prisoners and urge them to change their mode of living. She once had the experience of arresting two men, but they had accompanied her courteously without any trouble. She related many interesting incidents of a woman's touch bringing families who were separating or about to separate, together again, wayward girls brought back to lives of respectability again, etc. One way of dealing with boys and girls who would not be controlled by their parents was to put them in jail over night and they soon got over their naughtiness.

It was an address of intense interest giving a glimpse at the dark side of human history and exemplifying the wonderful power of God to redeem fallen humanity.

Dye Material Manufactured By A Local Boy

Mr. B. Walton Succeeds In Manufacturing It and Placing It On the Market

The following from the Toronto Globe refers to a former well-known Peterborough boy, a graduate of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute, in the person of Mr. B. Walton, son of Mr. Geo. Walton of Smith:

Yet another young chemist, Mr. B. Walton, also a graduate of the University of Toronto, is at work endeavouring, and succeeding, to supply the shortage of material for the dye industry. Resorcin, which is being made under the auspices of Pres. C. A. E. Carr, of Allied Chemicals, Limited, is one of the intermediates for making dyes, could not be obtained other than from Germany, but after much labour Mr. Walton has been able to manufacture it and place it on the market. Before the war this commodity was worth ninety cents a pound; it went as high as $40 but is now down to $15 a pound.

The difficulty imposed upon these chemists engaged in research work is soon seen when it is pointed out that some of the big German drug firms employ as many as 1,500 chemists. Many big Canadian firms employ only one, but these people are going ahead reaching independence earlier than would be the case under nominal conditions.

LOW POINT FOR FORD CAR PRICES

Money Can Be Saved by Prompt Buying—No Increase For the Present

It will be good news to prospective Ford car buyers that the prices of the Ford will remain as they are for the present. Attention is directed to the extra announcement from the local dealer in to-day's issue, wherever the facts are placed plainly before the public. It seems quite evident that Ford car prices are at their very lowest point now. Every condition points to practically certain increases in the cost of motor car materials and how long the Ford Motor Co. can continue to sell at present prices is very uncertain. It is stated that among the materials that are important elements in the construction of an automobile he costs have advanced from 40 to 150 per cent. Such being the case it seems phenomenal that the selling price of the Ford still remains at the same price. Many other makers of cars have made not one but two advances within the past year, and others are giving warning of further advances.

While in Toronto this week Mr. Duffus had a private interview with the Ford Motor Co., and ascertained the true position as regards their attitude about the price question; and the announcement, in another column, covers the situation. So far a public can be taken into confidence.

During this time, when prices are being readjusted by motor car makers, it will behoove all who want the Ford to make use of the privileges held out for the present. Those who wait will certainly run the risk of not being able to get such an advantageous price when present material supplies are exhausted and cars must be built from materials bought in the present market, then the Ford must be priced in comparison to its greater value and greater cost.

A bunch of heifers, due to calve in September, were recently sold in England at £40 each.

TWO COURSES OPEN.

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—An Associated Press despatch from Watertown, N.Y., to-day says:

"Canadians of draft age in the United States face the alternative of returning to the Dominion when summoned by the draft boards or of taking out papers for naturalization here. There are hundreds of men in the northern part of New York state who have escaped service on the ground that they are aliens. The draft boards on this side are ready to certify to Ottawa claims of these men. It is a question of fighting for one country or the other now.

There has been a steady influx of men since the munitions plants of Canada completed contracts. They have secured work in local shell factories.

Greek King Balked Plan To Beat Turks

WOULD HAVE BROUGHT WAR TO A CONCLUSION A YEAR EARLIER AT LEAST.

London, August 31.—The Athens correspondent of Reuters Limited, says that the full report of the speech made by Premier Venizelos on Aug. 26th, throws a new and important light on the Dardanelles campaign, and shows that if the plans he contemplated had not been arbitrarily vetoed by Constantine, the Greek King, Serbia might have been saved, Bulgaria forced to keep neutral, and Turkey defeated early in 1915. At the time he proposed intervention in the war—in February, 1916, Gallipoli was defended by only six thousand Turks scattered among the different fortresses with scanty supplies of ammunition. From the Greek representative at Constantinople it was learned that the Turks were actually preparing to evacuate the capital, and he declared that if his policy had been carried out a Greek army could have been secretly landed at Gallipoli, and could have entered Constantinople within a fortnight.

"Thus," said M. Venizelos, "Turkey would have been destroyed, Russia would have had her food supplied by sea, which would have enabled her to export her grain, she would have escaped the offensive of 1916. Bulgaria seeing Greek and Franco-British armies in the rear, would not have dared to intervene, and Germany would have lost the east, and the war would have ended one year earlier."

As it was the allies undertook the Dardanelles campaign more than a month after the Turks began their defence works at Gallipoli, having said M. Venizelos, no longer any confidence in Greece.

MILK CONTROLLER IN SWEDEN THIS WINTER

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—Among the passengers recently arrived here was Miss Nellie Johanson of New York, who had gone to Sweden three months ago to see her parents. "I had not seen them in fifteen years," she said, "and, as I was a very little girl when I was brought to America.

I scarcely recognized them. I found food condition in Sweden worse than in any other part of Scandinavia. There is plenty of food in Norway and Denmark, but the prices there are prohibitive, and the poorer classes accordingly suffer intensely.

"Hotels and restaurants are supplied with food before families are allowed to get any. I had to pay sixty cents for a demi-tasse of coffee, and a one course dinner for another girl and me cost $5 in a moderate priced restaurant.

"In Sweden a milk controller has been appointed for the coming winter. Babies are to have a pint of milk a day and grown-ups half a pint. It is feared that unless something is done by America to relieve the situation in Sweden the suffering will become unbearable.

"I think the only salvation for that poor country would be for the United States to send not only food in sufficient quantities, but an American to control the food market."

Two Smith Township Barns Destroyed By Fire

One Barn and Contents Valued at $5,800—Buildings Were Struck By Lightning

One of the finest and largest barns in Smith township was destroyed by fire early Sunday morning during the severe electrical storm that swept over this part of the country. The barn, which was valued at thirty-three hundred dollars was on the farm of Mr. Samuel McKibbon ninth concession of Smith township. The tenants were the Northey brothers, of whom Mr. Stanley Northey is the senior member. The crop destroyed with the barn, was valued a twenty-five hundred dollars. This was covered by one thousand dollars worth of insurance. The barn was insured to the extent of about one-half of its value. The entire season's crop was in the building, with the exception of a small quantity of buckwheat. Included in the loss of equipment was a brand new hay loader, a gasoline engine and a complete waterworks system.

The fire broke out about five o'clock Sunday morning following a terrific flash of lightning. Flames shot up in the air to a height of one hundred and twenty-five feet. The telephone was pressed into service and help summoned from the surrounding country. Very little was saved with the exception of the live stock.

Another Barn Lost.

William Mann who resides between the seventh and eighth concessions of the same township lost a valuable barn during the storm. Included in the loss was the entire season's crop. The loss to barn and contents will be heavy, with only partial insurance.

They were having an argument as to whether it was correct to say of a hen she is "setting" or "sitting" and, not being able to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion, they decided to submit the problem to Farmer Giles.

"My friends," said he, "that don't interest me at all. What I wants to know when I hear a hen cackle is whether she is laying or lying."—"Tit-Bits."

HALDANE KNEW THAT GERMANY HAD PLANS FOR INVADING ENGLAND

Important Revelations of British and German Negotiations During Eight Years Preceding War—Haldane Met the Bulgarian Czar—The Kaiser's Concert.

ASSISTANCE TO FRANCE

LONDON, September 4.—Important revelations which form a valuable chapter in the history of British and German negotiations during the eight years before the war are published by the Manchester Guardian. The revelations are a detailed account of the negotiations which Richard Burdon Haldane (now Viscount Haldane) then Secretary for War, conducted with Emperor William, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the German Imperial Chancellor, Admiral von Tirpitz, Minister of German Navy, and other German leaders, including striking conversations.

Haldane was the foremost student of Germany among the British public men, and his career has been a storm centre since the war, the gist of the attacks upon him being based on a charge that he knew of Germany's designs but had reassured his fellow countrymen that all was well.

ASSISTANCE TO FRANCE.

The Manchester Guardian prefaces the article with the following:

"We hold no brief for Lord Haldane. Indeed, on the whole question of secret diplomacy—a diplomacy so secret that its workings in even very vital particulars are not always known beyond the bounds of an inner cabinet—we hold a view quite different from that which he and too many statesmen have been accustomed to act upon."

Haldane visited Germany in September, 1906, as Minister of war. He was working in close connection with Sir Edward Grey (then Foreign Minister). He took part first in conversations with the French general staff. The idea of these conversations was if Germany attacked France, Great Britain should be prepared to give military assistance and help hold the frontier opposite Belgium.

Haldane was convinced that assistance could not be given France within a reasonable time, and bent all his thoughts toward organization for extreme rapidity in mobilization and transport, which meant complete re-organization of the British army.

MET BULGARIAN CZAR.

Emperor William read a speech Haldane made to London Germans, and invited him to attend the manoeuvres. Haldane was anxious to get useful information about the German organization so he accepted. On his way he visited King Edward, who was stopping at Marianbad.

"He there saw King Ferdinand of Bulgaria," says the Guardian, who was worrying King Edward with a project that, if rumour is true, boded no good to Greece. King Edward very properly did not want to talk politics with Ferdinand. He told Lord Haldane that he must put an end to all of Ferdinand's conversations with himself who could 'act only through my ministers.'"

Haldane, not desiring to hear Ferdinand's projects against Greece, talked so volubly on other topics that Ferdinand could not get in a word edgewise.

NO CAUSE FOR ALARM.

The Guardian then relates a story of an English author of how Emperor William at the grand review galloped up to Haldane, who stood with a top hat and frock coat in his carriage, and said:—

"A splendid machine I have in this army, Mr. Haldane. Isn't it so? What could I do without it, situated as I am between the Russians and the French But the French are your allies, so I beg your pardon."

Haldane replied that if he were in the Emperor's place he would feel quite comfortable.

FOR INVASION OF ENGLAND.

Haldane and two assistants went thoroughly into the organization of the German War Office, rubbing some of the officials the wrong way. They afterwards thawed, however. Lieutenant-General von Moltke, chief of the general staff, in a conversation asked Haldane to put whatever questions he liked.

"In that case," replied Haldane, "I shall call for the plans for an invasion of England."

Von Moltke replied: "We have not one in the building." To which Haldane, looking out of the window toward the Admiralty, said: "Perhaps they are there."

Von Moltke admitted that they were there, and that they were very good plans, too.

GATE TO INDIA.

The article gives for the first time Emperor William's negotiations of the Bagdad Railway agreement. While visiting Windsor Castle in November, 1907, Emperor William took Haldane aside the first evening of his visit and said how sorry he was there was so much friction over the Bagdad railway.

"My answer was we wanted a gate to protect India from troops coming down the new railway," said Haldane. Asked what he meant by a gate, Haldane replied that he meant control of the farthest off section of the railway—the one nearest the Persian Gulf. "I will give you the gate."

The Foreign Office regarded the negotiations favourably, but it was considered necessary to bring in France and Russia, whose interests also were involved. A conference in Berlin of the four powers was arranged, with the support of Emperor William, but it was defeated at Berlin on the ground that an agreement about the Bagdad railway was no business of Russia.

Kaiser Not Boss.

This, says one article, was the first and clearest indication of two facts about the German foreign policy — that the Emperor was not quite master in his own house, and that official Berlin was divided into two parties, one anxious for a working agreement between England, France and Germany, and another, not yet avowedly a war party, regarding all these attempts hopeless or dangerous to both. Then and for some time afterward Emperor William belonged to the first party, and genuinely was anxious for friendly relations with England. The Crown Prince, with Admiral von Tirpitz and the general staff, and probably Prince von Buelow, belonged definitely to the second.

A Division.

The party division became sharper, and later was persisted in by Germany even after the war began. Haldane had German sympathizers in the same sense that Emperor William had English sympathizers, who believed it was for the good of the world that England and Germany should come to an understanding. The key to Haldane's whole policy was, while preparing against the eventual triumph of the anti-English party, to as far as possible strengthen those in Germany disposed to be friendly.

Kaiser's Conceit.

"The vulgar idea of the Kaiser as a deep and consistent schemer," says the article, "is almost certainly wrong. He is before everything else a poser, an actor. He desires before anything to cut a figure on the world's stage. He is usually asking himself: Am I or am I not of the stage of the great Frederick, in small things as in the great?

"He once prepared a paper on the reform of the English militia and sent it to the British War Office, where it was read and filed, and he was as pleased as possible when a new War Minister in a conversation told him that he had both seen and read it."

To Discuss Affairs.

Viscount Haldane visited Berlin again in the spring of 1912, not to negotiate a treaty, but under instructions by Sir Edward Grey to discuss affairs freely and refer everything to the Cabinet. The subjects of conversation were the general European situation and the German shipbuilding programme in consequence of the growth and power of Germany as the head of the Triple Alliance. Naturally there had been other powers which tended to approximate thereto but there was no reason why the Triple Alliance and what was called the Triple Entente should not be friendly.

Britain Not Hostile.

Viscount Haldane assured Dr. von Bethman-Hollweg, who seemed skeptical, that Great Britain had no agreement with France and Russia except as had been published. Great Britain's Italian Offensive is Progressing With Great Intensity, Beating Back all the Attempted Counter Attacks of the Enemy—Austrian Losses Estimated at 100,000.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 2.—The Italian Embassy received yesterday from the Government at Rome a cablegram dealing with the progress of the Italian offensive. It stated that General Cadorna, the Commander-in-chief believed that the present battle on the Isonzo front was the greatest of the present war, when considered in the light of its probable results. According to the despatch, Cadorna thinks the Italians are within reach of their objective points.

The message reads:

"The Italian offensive is progressing with great intensity, beating back all the attempted counter-attacks of the enemy.

"General Cadorna, speaking of the achievements of the Italian army during the last eleven days, has declared to the foreign military attaches and the representatives of the press at the Italian front that the battle now being fought on the Isonzo front must be considered, for its probable consequences, as the greatest fought during the present war on all fronts.

"The battle is still developing on a front of seventy-five miles, and the enemy is yielding ground at every point. It is impossible to give any information as to the number engaged on this wide front, because information of this character would benefit the enemy. But while, naturally, at some points the advance of the Italian troops is speedier than at other points, still the objectives which the Italians are aiming at gaining are within the reach of the Italian army.

"General Cadorna expressed his unbounded enthusiasm over the morale of the Italian troops. In such a long battle and on such an enormous front not a single case of uncertainty by individuals or units of the army has been noticed

"General Cadorna pointed out the fact that the enemy, beaten on land, had not been able to hold his own even in the air. The Austria airplanes have not hampered the work of the Italian aviators on the battle front, nor have they interfered with the work of the Italian and English monitors operating against the defences at the Gulf of Trieste."

Austrians Lose 100,000.

LONDON, Sept. 2.— A Milan despatch to The Daily Chronicle says:

A special message received from military headquarters estimates the total losses of the Austrians during the present battle of the Isonzo at not less than 100,000 men. Fourteen strongly-fortified mountains have already been stormed and captured, and a big breach has been made in the Austrian lines, measuring over eleven miles in width. Italian advance guards at some points are now bivouacking seven and a half miles ahead of their old positions.

The newly-conquered territory comprises some forty villages and hamlets, the civil population of which have been found in famishing condition because all food supplies had been withheld since the eve of the battle.

The rout of General Borovic's army in part of the centre and on the right wing was so precipitate that the Austrians had no time to spike their abandoned guns or destroy the vast stores of munitions, and foodstuffs hidden in the depths of caverns, or set on fire the elegantly furnished officers' quarters and numerous other permanent shelters. These the advancing troops of Cadorna were able to seize intact. The booty captured includes over a thousand yoke of live oxen.

Now, however, that the retreat of the Austrians is becoming more orderly they are systematically burning and blowing up everything in the rear.

Udine, Sept. 2. — German troops appeared for the first time on the Carso front Thursday morning, according to Austrian prisoners. The Austrians are rushing reinforcements to the Italian front from the Russian-Roumanian front, the prisoners say.

Four German Mine Sweepers Are Sunk By The British Fleet

Naval Engagement Off the Coast of Jutland—Several Submarines Are Also Reported Sunk—Will Make the Huns More Cautious

London, September 2.—Four German mine sweepers were destroyed yesterday off the coast of Jutland by British light forces, according to an announcement issued to-night by the Admiralty. The official statement reads:

"Our light forces operating off the coast of Jutland (Denmark) this morning destroyed four enemy minesweeping vessels."

Copenhagen, September 2.—A naval engagement occurred early yesterday morning between British and German mosquito craft off Nyminde Gap, on the west coast of Jutland. British destroyers attacked 4 German armed destroyers and drove them ashore. All four of the destroyers seem to have been destroyed.

A Rinkiobing newspaper says that the British continued to bombard the trawlers after they grounded and completed their destruction.

About one hundred German seamen were landed many of whom were severely wounded. Medical assistance was sent from Rinkiobing, the nearest large town. One rumour has it that one hundred dead have come on shore but apparently this is a distorted version of the fact that about one hundred men have reached the shore.

The German craft were presumably engaged in patrolling and in minesweeping to clear the route for the German submarines. German airplanes and submarines, according to one account, took part in the fight.

A semi-official Danish report says that four German trawlers were driven ashore near Rinkiobing Fiord, and that the crews were landed. The remainder of the fleet of German armed trawlers fled to the southward.

In connection with the successful British raid on a German fleet, the German trawlers, according to various accounts, continued to fire after seeking refuge in Danish waters. The British raid appears to have caught not only the trawlers but several of the submarines. The latter were compelled to submerge so hastily that some of the crews were unable to enter the hatches and were left swimming in the water.

The demoralized remnants of the German trawler fleet that was attacked and shattered by a British destroyer force yesterday off the coast of Jutland in the North Sea, four of the German craft being driven ashore and destroyed, made off to the southward, scattering and sending wireless messages for assistance as they ran. A detachment of German light naval forces, accompanied by hydro-airplanes and submarines arrived shortly afterwards but too late to save four trawlers that had been run on ashore. In the course of the encounter that ensued a German hydro-airplane was brought down and a companion aircraft was seen to dive to the water, presumably to rescue the survivors.

The German armed trawler fleet, confident in its protection by Zeppelin observation and the proximity of a supporting squadron has of late working in the boldest fashion in sweeping the seas clear on the route for the submarines and has been extending its sphere of operations to the northward. Frequent reports from the Danish coast towns mentioned the sighting of war ships and the daily air ship patrol was one of the sights of the big Danish resort of France. Yesterday's experience seems likely to make the Grmans more cautious and to that extent interfere with the submarine campaign.

By Anna Alice Chapin

CHAPTER XIX.

ENID: LADY ERRANT.

....God at need,
Mount thee on the weightiest steed;
Spare not to spur, nor stint to ride,
. . . . . .
Say that the fated hour is come.

The doors in the Forsythe apartment did not only connect, but all opened into the corridor, so Enid was able to slip back into her own bedroom without being seen or heard. It was in her dressing room that the other three girls were still chattering and "preparing for the party."

Enid was a curious girl—very elemental at heart; very correct outside. Her revulsions and reactions were peculiar and were controlled by inside moods and outside impressions. To-night a primitive impulse had taken her down the hallway to her fiance's quarters. Flung back upon itself, that primitive impulse, curdled by the bitterness of her passing experience, urged to a plan of action entirely unthought of by her heretofore.

Martin Hale was in danger!

This was the point which leaped up paramountly before her mental vision. The picture of him — the mountain god as she had trembled before him in the midnight hours on the mountain top, appeared before her there in her perfumed half darkened bedroom. His coming, even spiritually, was incongruous vaguely shocking. She felt her face burn, and did not know where to look. But the fact must be faced: he was in danger.

Of course she knew that it was her duty to go straight in to the girl in the other room, the girl dressing up even at that moment in the rose-red gown, the girl who had a right to him, and tell her. But she couldn't!

There was something in her that made her determine to do what was to be done herself. She knew the way to the Four Trail Crossing, and surely old Mason would be able to communicate with him. There was a savage sort of exultation in the thought that she—the "lady," supposed to be even now resting before her conquests at the Powder Ball — should writ out over Polly, the girl of the hills on ground where Polly and not she rightfully belonged. Enid felt suddenly liberated, exhilarated, whether Martin Hale was really the man for her or not, she was about to embark upon an enterprise which conventional girls did not as a rule consider. She was not going to any Cotillon Poudre; she was going alone into the mountain fastnesses at night to save a man's life, or at least his freedom. The fierce, adventurous spirit in her gloried that no one was going to know her mission. She was going unaided, unadvised. But—she was going.

She walked casually into her dressing-room. She could only reach her riding clothes by crossing it.

"What's the matter?" said Alice Baker, turning and staring at her friend's white little face. "You look as though you had seen a ghost."

"How do you know that I have not" asked Enid, a trifle hardly. She was in the mood when one must be either hard or emotional. She preferred the former.

"Because," said Alice, "ghosts have aristocratic tastes and don't patronize hotels."

"I suppose," said Enid, with a desperate sense of protecting herself, "that ghosts are like other creatures, and go where they can find the best hunting."

"Enid!" exclaimed Alice starring. "You don't sound or look a bit like yourself!"

"Isn't that comforting?" said Enid calmly. "Oneself is nearly always such a dull sort of person."

Before Miss Baker could put in any other disconcerting word, she added, smiling at beautiful flushed Polly in the dress that matched her cheeks. "Do you mind my telling you how exquisite you are, Miss Mason?"

Polly's flush grew a bit too deep for perfect beauty but Alice said lightly:

"She's going to be the belle of the ball! Look out for your laurels, Enid!"

"Oh, no!" said Enid, with that sharp thrill of triumph known only to a woman when she really beats another. "I'll leave my laurels to her. I'm going to look after—hers!"

Wherewith she vanished from the room.

"What on earth did she mean?" said Polly Baker, knitting her brow. She turned on Polly. "Did you understand?" she demanded.

"I didn't understand the words entirely," said Polly, with bowed head. "But—I reckon I understood the idea."

Alice stared a little more.

"I swear you're the worst lot of puzzles I ever struck!" she declared impatiently. "I wish any of you could stick to one line for five minutes! But there, child, pin up the curl over your right ear and be careful to mince a bit as you walk. You are so gorgeously strong and free that you might spoil the picture. Walk across the floor now."

Polly strode splendidly across, her round long lines swinging and curving into exquisite poses as she moved.

"No no!" exclaimed Alice Baker. Then she stopped and surveyed Polly all over again.

"Yes!" she said. "Do it like that! No one here has ever seen anything half so beautiful!"

A minute later Enid having more or less prepared her way, sauntered back into the dressing room. Her maid was watching her this time.

She walked into the large closet at the further end of the dressing room and quickly and silently selected a complete outfit of riding things. As she did so she could hear Alice and Polly laughing together over the difficulty of placing one particular court plaster patch upon the snowy shoulder blade.

"Mademoiselle!" she gasped. What——"

"Chut!" hissed Enid imperatively. "These things must be taken into my bedroom. No one must know." Even in the dimness her eyes were compelling. The woman loved her anyway.

"One moment!" she murmured. Then she seized a big wrapper of velvet and fur from a near-by hook and, taking Enid's burden into her own arms, covered it effectively. They went out of the closet casually, carelessly Enid stopped to tell Polly how charming she looked, the maid passed on unobserved into the other room. Then Enid followed her and in a dead silence and a faint light changed her dress.

"Mademoiselle is—no—going into danger" whispered the maid.

"I don't know!" she whispered Enid laughed under her breath; already the sting of of adventure was whipping her blood.

"I would rather," said the Frenchwoman sincerely and irrepressively, "that they were in the hands of Monsieur Radnor!"

Enid chilled and stiffened.

"You need not 'rather' anything," she said, with a sort of hushed asperity. "I am going out and no one — not even Madame, is to know anything about it. Anyway," she added, with a momentarily returning gleam of humor, "you don't know where I am going, so you couldn't tell them anyway."

"As if I would, Mademoiselle."

"You might not!" returned Enid softening. "Anyway, talk to no one of my going."

"And—M. Radnor?"

"M. Radnor last of all!"

"But if Mademoiselle did not come back. If there were—if there might be trouble—then I am free from my promise and may speak?"

"I suppose so," said Enid indifferently, as she moved warily towards the door. She laughed noiselessly, and slipped out.

Augustine stood still in the centre of the room, nodding her head silently. Then she murmured to herself with unaffected relief, as though carrying on the conversation. "Then I may speak—and to M. Radnor first of all!"

A minute later she shivered, and glanced toward the window. It was already dusk but a curious half glow, almost more illuminating than light, lay on all things.

"Dieu nous garde!" muttered Augustine, crossing herself. "A thunderstorm is on the way!" She trembled from head to foot. Augustine was afraid of thunderstorms!

Haldane Knew That Germans Had Plans

military preparations were not hostile. Referring to Morocco, Viscount Haldane said that if Germany had intended to attack France and destroy her capacity to defend herself Great Britain would have had such an interest in the result that she could not have stood by and seen it done.

Chancellor's Scheme.

Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg proposed as a formula that neither England nor Germany should enter into any combination against the other. Substantially the following conversation ensued:

Haldane: "I don't like the way of putting it. Suppose Germany joined in attack on Paris or Belgium or Portugal, which we are bound by our treaty obligations to defend."

The Chancellor, satirically: "O'f Holland."

Haldane: "I am not clear about the treaty situation in regard to Holland, but supposing Germany were to pounce upon France and proceed to dismember her? England surely could not stand idly by."

The Chancellor, satirically: "Or what you say is fatal to my formula."

Unprovoked Attack.

Haldane: "What about an undertaking against aggressive or unprovoked attack, and against all combinations and plans directed to that end?"

The Chancellor: "But how can you define what is meant by aggressive and provoked attack?"

Maintains Supremacy.

Haldane asked what good was an agreement if Germany was going to increase her battleships and force England to do the same. England, he said, certainly would have to lay down two keels to Germany's one.

Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg was anxious to meet Haldane, but evidently was nervous about what the Admiralty would say. The next day the question was discussed at lunch with Emperor William, Admiral von Tirpitz (Minister of the Navy) and Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg.

Dropped One Ship.

Haldane made the point that an agreement would be bones without flesh if Germany went on with her new fleet. The Emperor was visibly disturbed at the suggestion that there could be no political agreement worth having unless there was an agreement about German shipbuilding. Admiral von Tirpitz said it was hard for Germany to make any admission about Great Britain's two-power standard. Haldane said the initiative was with Germany. The conversation resulted in the dropping of one battleship from Germany's programme.

The next day the conversation between the Chancellor and Haldane resulted in a provisional approval of Haldane's formula for the Entente with the addition of two important articles. These were:

First—If either side became entangled in a war in which it could not be said to be the aggressor, the other would observe benevolent neutrality, and try to localize the conflict.

Second—The neutrality should not apply where there were no reconcilable existing contracts. The contracting powers were to do all in their power to prevent differences between them and other powers.

Changes in Africa.

The Chancellor offered England an exceptional position in the railway between Bagdad and Bazara. Haldane asked for the controlling position. Germany was to recognize England's political interests in the Persian gulf and southern Persia, and to help England get from Turkey a concession for an extension of the railway from Bazara to Koweit. Germany asked certain territorial changes in Africa.

The article says the proposed settlement was, on the whole, favourable to England, except that Turkey was drifting into the position of a dependency of Germany. Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg would have yielded on the naval difficulty for the sake of an agreement in the Near East, but Admiral von Tirpitz had his way for the sake of a few ships which have been of no value to Germany in the war.

Tried to Aid Moderates.

The article concludes: "Haldane tried by every means consistent with Great Britain's interests and honorable obligations to strengthen the hands of the moderates in Germany, while his enemies have strengthened the hands of the extremists and supported them with arguments that England, despite her fair professions, was the real enemy. Considering the political forces at work the war may have been inevitable, but those who tried to make headway against the current have no reason to regret their endeavour."

"I want to be honest, sir. I can't support your daughter, but I am afraid to tell her so, because she has set her heart on marrying me." "Never mind. Do your best. I can't support her, either."—"Life."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Obstreperous Jim

Story of a Farmer Boy.

By F. A. MITCHELL

There are two things that especially interest me. One is gardening, the other automobiling. In these I have found occupation and amusement after retiring from business, though I am free to confess that since gardening is confined to a portion of the year and one can go motoring at any time I have done more of the latter than the former.

It is in the spring that I have found comfort in my garden. I prepare my ground early, and then when the first warm days come on I start out on a brief tour in my car, for experience has taught me that "one swallow does not make a summer," and I have obtained better results by refraining from planting till later when more reliance is to be placed on the continued warmth of the sun germinating my seed than by putting it in when cold is liable to follow heat.

But there is work in gardening, and motoring is all pleasure. Therefore I confess I prefer the latter.

One morning I stopped at a farmhouse for water for my radiator. The farmer came out, took a bucket, pumped the water and insisted on pouring it into my tank. Before leaving him I indulged him in conversation, for I have noticed that if there is one thing a farmer likes it is to talk.

This is natural. A countryman does not mingle in the hurly burly of city life. The city man comes home in the evening having had more talk than he has needed and prefers to sit down and be quiet. But the farmer is in a great measure cut off from all interchange of thought with his fellow men. If he can get a city man to swap ideas with him he will talk or listen, as his makeup impels, till the cows come home.

"You seem to have a great variety of produce on your farm," I said to the farmer.

"Yes," he said, "we have. We're near enough to the city for a market, and we put in a lot of different things, so that if some fail we don't make a dead loss."

At that moment a sturdy boy of five came out of the house and stood looking admiringly at my machine.

"Your boy?" I asked the farmer.

"I'm his granddad."

"What would the world be without the children?" I observed.

"You're right there, stranger," said the old man. "The only trouble about children is to understand 'em. We don't consider that they're children and not men and women. Consequence is we rub 'em the wrong way. And I've noticed that sometimes the most obstreperous turn out the best. We send 'em to school, and if they learn easy we think they're fine. If they don't we think they're no good.

"I was readin' about the big inventor t'other day—the man they call the wizard, and it said when he was a little feller his teacher took him to his mother and told her the boy was a dunce. The mother took the job o' teachin' him herself, but I reckon that boy was born to teach other people, for that's what he's been doin' ever since.

"I never had any trouble with any o' my children, except my boy Jim, the father o' this little shaver here. The fault with Jim was that when he got to be thirteen or fourteen years old he knew mor'n I and his mother and the while family. He was ready to tell me how not to run the farm, but he couldn't tell me how to run it. He thought he could, and sometimes he did. I told him he'd better keep his opinions to himself.

"Sometimes he'd do things without my knowing it or against my orders. I remember one day I told him to trim an apple tree and be particular to cut off the lower limbs that was hangin' near the ground. What did he do but cut off all the top ones. I didn't give him a lickin' for his disobedience, but I scolded him a lot. Do you know the little cuss' way o' doin' it turned out fine. After that the tree he trimmed give us the biggest and the best apples of any in the orchard. And the best part of it was we didn't have to go up on a long ladder to pick 'em and lose a lot by not bein' able to get at 'em.

"Well, Jim was always doin' som'pin' the wrong way. When a man is runnin' anything he don't want his assistants to tell him how to do it, especially a boy that he has brought up from a baby. Jim was always monkeyin' with the farm machinery, throwin' it out o' gear mostly, though once in awhile he'd make it run even. I told him to let it alone and to let everything alone, but it didn't do any good.

"One time I found a quarter acre o' ground that had always produced well ruined. Nothing came up there that season. Come to find out Jim had been puttin' some kind o' chemicals into it. Jim was about sixteen when he did this, and I concluded to get rid of him. I told him he'd better go out for a hired hand, only I warned him that he'd better not tell the men he worked for how to run their farms and do things as he was told to do 'em.

"About this time his grandmother died and left him her savin's, about $1,200. Instead o' leavin' it to me, as Jim's guardeen, she left it to him to have right off. I think the most incorrigible boys is the favored ones of their mothers, and they certainly are of the gals. Anyway Jim was a favorite of his grandmother, who seemed to think that he knew more than I did.

"Jim went away, and I supposed he was goin' to do as I told him—hire out for a farm hand.

"Meantime while he was gone I wasn't gettin' along very well with the farm. I reckoned the land had been worked out and required to be fertilized. I didn't have the money to do the job as it ought to be done, and I thought that if I didn't spend a lot on it I'd lose what I put into it, so I didn't do anything. I tried to raise such crops as didn't need much fertilizer, but didn't get much of a return.

"Jim was away four years, and all the while I was runnin' down financially. He used to write home once in awhile, but he didn't tell us what he was doin'. But Jim was never a good hand at explainin' things. I've thought since that if when he was a boy he'd have told me somep'n about what he was drivin' at I'd have had more patience with him.

"The only thing Jim did tell us, and he wrote that to his mother the last year he was away, was that he'd got a sweetheart. He said she was the purtiest gal in the world and the best. When his mother told me about it I said I reckoned Jim would have a hard time takin' care of a wife, especially if he was goin' to do things his own way and never take any advice from anybody.

"Well, when I had got so low financially that I had to put a mortgage on my farm Jim come home. He said he'd been to an agricultural college and had come home to help me out.

"'Father,' he said, 'you and all the rest of the old fashioned farmers have been blundering along for ages. The earth and everything in it is a big laboratory, and there's nothing that isn't subject to the laws of science. Do you remember when you told me to trim the apple tree and cut off the lower branches? Well, it occurred to me that that tree was a mighty big climb for the sap; that by the time it got to the top it must be tired out, and that what apples it produced would be small and few. Besides, it would cost more to gather apples grown as high as that than they'd be worth when you got 'em down.

"'And do you remember the ground I put the chemicals in? Well, that was a failure, but when a boy of fourteen begins experimenting he's not likely to succeed without a lot of failures. Sometimes a grown educated scientist will work for years over a problem and fail in the end.

"'When you tired of me and grandmother left me the legacy I determined to use it to learn what there was known about scientific agriculture. I don't claim to have learned any more than is known by others, but I've learned that and it's a good foundation on which to learn more. I'm not going to do much experimenting on my own book till I have put you on a better basis in your efforts to make money out of the farm.

"'And I must tell you further that there's business in farming as well as anything else. My vacations I've spent clerking in a produce store in a big city. There I've learned certain of some middlemen's methods. I've seen something of how he squeezes the consumer on the one hand and the farmer on the other. I don't want to squeeze either myself, but the more a man knows about squeezing the less likely he is to get squeezed.

"'Now, dad, I'll tell you what we must do. We must take advantage of our opportunities such as they are and turn away from what are not opportunities, no matter how attractive they look. We've got a market handy for such produce as is used on the tables of any and every body. We'll go into table vegetables on a small scale at first, and if we find it pays we'll increase the scale. As soon as we can work it we'll open a store for the sale of our own produce and make the whole profit ourselves. But we can't go too fast; must feel our way and shift our plans as we run up against stone walls.'"

The farmer paused in his narrative, cast a glance over his broad beds of garden truck and concluded:

"There's the result of Jim's work. He didn't do any experimentin' till he'd got the business well goin'. I call it the business because business is a part and a very important part of farmin'.

"I've said that Jim didn't do any experimentin', so he didn't in the regular line of the work on the farm, but he's been doin' it all the while in a small way, and he's found out some things already.

"That mortgage I told you of was paid off in two years, and now there's plenty over for all.

"Jim married his sweetheart and they live in the cottage down yonder. This little Jim"—putting his hand on the boy's head—"is a chip off the old block; he has a will of his own, anyway. There's his dad now."

A sturdy young man of twenty-five or six in overalls came up to us and was introduced by his father. I had some talk with him about his profession, but found him very reticent and could get only a little out of him. Evidently he was a man of deeds instead of words.

I was so pleased with this bit of life's success that I motored that way again and met Jim's mother and his wife. There was an air of prosperity and comfort about all these people and their farm that was very attractive to me, and in time I came to know them all well. During these visits Jim received a high appointment in the United States department of agriculture.

If there is any moral to this story it seems to me it is that a genius is so far out of the beaten track that he is apt to be considered a dunce. In other words, his brain is so absorbed with the generally unknown that it is impossible to fix it on the known.

LITTLE BOY HAD DIARRHOEA

Only Blood Passed Bowels

Diarrhoea, dysentery and summer complaint are responsible for more deaths, especially of children, during the summer months, than any other form of disease.

Diarrhoea does not need to persist for any length of time until the whole system is weakened and no other disease so quickly undermines the strength and brings about a condition of prostration and often collapse.

Mrs. E. Stoddard, Lower Clark's Harbour, N.S., writes. "When my little boy was a year and a half old he was taken awfully bad with diarrhoea. I had the doctor, but he got worse so that only blood passed his bowels. I tried everything, but he got no relief. One day while I was at work, I picked up a piece of paper, and on it was an advertisement for Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. After trying a bottle he began to get better and the second one made a cure. I would not be without it in the house for my little ones. I am proud to say "Dr. Fowler's" saved my little boy's life."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has been on the market for the past 72 years and there are many imitations of this wonderful bowel complaint remedy. See that you get the genuine when you ask for it. Price 35c.

Sweden Grows Rich Sending Food To Huns

COURT IS INFATUATED WITH PRUSSIAN IDEAS.

American Cereals, Plus Vast Amount of Swedish Grain and Cattle, Are Re-exported.

"If Sweden has crying need of food supplies, as Admiral Lindmann, Swedish Minister of Foreign Affairs, tries to make out, it is due solely to the cupidity of a group of money grabbing exporters and the infatuation for Germany that prevails in our aristocracy and court circles."

This is the comment of a Swede, a resident of the United States, who has just arrived here from a long sojourn in his native country. Discussing the situation there he said it is certainly difficult, and cited as proof the popular demonstrations which have taken place recently with significant frequency.

"The working classes of Sweden are desperate from hunger," he said, "but also they are exasperated by the policy of the government, which is autocratic to the extent of rivalling the Hohenzollern regime. Only a suicidal policy could have brought such distress to an agricultural country like Sweden, which, moreover, since the beginning of the war, has increased the imports of American cereals 400 per cent., compared with the imports before the war.

Fed Prussia, Made Profit.

"The reason is that these imports, plus a vast supply of Swedish grain and cattle, have been exported to Germany to profit solely a number of wealthy pro-German Swedes and the German military party. These profiteers even had the impudence to extol in the press what they called the intelligence, courage and material and moral fortitude with which the Swedish government defied England.

"But the food shortage led the people to look into the causes. The discovery that the government's policy antagonized England, France and the United States, the very countries where Sweden could have obtained everything necessary for her alimentation and industries, created a spirit of animosity against the financial aristocratic speculators, whose sole object was to pocket German millions and help fasten the Prussian yoke on Europe.

Ruling Classes Pro-German.

"But hunger was not the sole cause of the recent disturbances. The workmen and small farmers are republicans as a class and are ready to seize any chance of escape from the semi-feudal conditions and "Prussian liberty" which are choking Sweden. The ruling class, composed of a few ancient families, is imbued with ideas of German kultur. They admire Prussian militarism, practice its principles, its domineering ways and its harshness and absurdity.

"The officers in Sweden are more swaggering than in Prussia. Imitators always exaggerate the defects of their model. Conditions have become worse since the accession of the present King and Queen, who are German sympathizers only, with pro-German sentiments. Any display of liberalism lays a man under the ban and exposes him to all sorts of vexations from the tyrannical, brutal police.

"Two leaders of labour organizations, members of the lower house, have been sentenced to prison for anti-German and anti-militaristic speeches. On the other hand, the greatest license is allowed to the insulters of President Wilson, who is abused grossly for having dared to take steps to protect the lives and commerce of the United States against submarines and to control the Swedish exportations to Germany.

"The Swedish junkers profess contempt for these steps and count upon profiting from a German victory, but will have reason to regret their blindness and arrogance sooner perhaps than you think."

The average acreage in fall wheat in Nelson township has been 688 of late years. This year it will be increased to 1,541 acres.

ECZEMA

NEARLY all forms of itching skin diseases come under the common heading of eczema. A vesicle, or small water pimple appears. This breaks and exudes a sticky substance which hardens and forms a crust. As this is accompanied by intense itching the suffering is often very keen, and the temptation to scratch the irritated skin is almost irresistible.

By using Dr. Chase's Ointment such relief is afforded that you can avoid scratching and unnecessarily irritating the diseased parts. This ointment thoroughly cleanses the sores, keeps them antiseptic, and sets up the process of healing. In obstinate cases a little patience is necessary, but you can rest assured that no treatment is so certain to effect a complete cure.

Mr. J. E. Jones, 226 University Ave., Kingston, Ont., writes :— "I had eczema on my hand for about five years. I tried a great many remedies, but found that while some of them checked it, none cured it permanently. Finally I tried Dr. Chase's Ointment, and in six weeks my hand was completely better. I would not do without a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment in the house if it cost $2.00 a box."

The old idea that eczema was a disease of the blood has been exploded, because it was impossible to effect a cure by means of internal medicines. The treatment must be applied locally to the diseased parts, and there has yet to be discovered anything to rival Dr. Chase's Ointment as a cure for eczema.

The War Needs of Canada

THE NEED FOR OPERATION OF INDUSTRIES FOR GOVERNMENT ACCOUNT

BY BENJAMIN ANTHORP GOULD

SIX

The questions arising under this caption are closely allied with questions of profiteering, and must be considered both in their relation to financial cost and to promptness and quantity of production. This article will deal chiefly with those industries which were already in existence in 1914 and similar questions in regard to new industries will be considered when government control of munition plants is taken up, as they fall into much the same category.

The imperative demand for supplies incident to war gave those industries in a position to meet it a strategic position of great power. The government had to get what was needed at once, and the question of cost was of less importance than that of time. It is fair to state that as a whole the Canadian manufacturers responded promptly and patriotically, and made every effort to furnish the requirements with the utmost speed and at reasonable prices. There were, however, undoubtedly instances of profiteering and of forcing undue profits out of the needs of the country. It would have been impossible to expect anything different, for not all men are patriots, and the history of every war shows that the selfish suttler and the selfish contractor has always existed.

There were undoubtedly a number of cases which were exploitations of the needs of the nation. These scandals have in most instances been hunted up, very properly as it seems to me. No good can come of recrimination over what is past and dead, and so long as those responsible for them are not in a position to repeat them more harm than good would come from such exposition as would tend to destroy the confidence of the people in the purity of administration. Worst of all is the attempt to make party political capital out of the inevitable mistakes which any government, no matter how well intentioned, must make when such unprecedented conditions have to be met. The last three years have been singularly free from suggestions that those in authority have profited in pocket by the war, and the wonder is that there has been so little cause for accusation of dishonesty. We must recognize that a great war cannot be carried on upon the margins of a bond-broker; it is of necessity expensive and extravagant; it seeks destruction of enemy resources more than conservation of our own.

The above considerations do not, however, mean either that the best or the only methods were adopted at the beginning, or that even now better methods cannot be put in force. The system of accepting the best obtainable quotations without a due investigation of their fairness has in some cases opened the door to collusion and combination, and is an incentive to attempts to assure greater profits than could be obtained from private business.

It is not possible in the great majority of cases for the government to take over and operate the essential industries on which it depends. A technical knowledge is needed which the government could not supply, and it is evident that those managers who have devoted their lives to promoting the efficiency of their plants can accomplish far more than could political appointees. It does not, however, follow from this that these managers should be permitted to continue their businesses with the one aim of turning out profits, often far greater than in time of peace. No matter how patriotic a man may be, the temptation to add a cent a pound here and a cent a dozen there, where no clearly justified criticism can be made, is too great to be generally successfully resisted. The press of government orders tends to raise the prices paid by private buyers, the increase of private prices forces up the prices payable by the government.

It would, however, be a comparatively easy matter to decree that certain plants in the essential industries should be operated by the present management for government account. Every considerable business in Canada is audited by accountants not interested in the business, and their audits are as a rule fair and full. Their audits can easily be made the basis for computing the proper compensation payable to the owners of the plants operated for government account. No manufacturer could justly complain if during the war he be compelled to operate his plant at the same percentage of profit as before the war, or at a just percentage of profit on investment or output in case his antebellum activities had been unsuccessful. The certainty of a reasonable profit would to a certain extent compensate him for sacrificing the possibility of larger profits. Furthermore, it would be to his interest as well as to the interest of the government to have his output as large as possible and produced at the lowest cost, because this cost would be a basis for the prices charged by his competitors not under government control, and would tend to prevent any undue strengthening of this competition against the time when it would have to be met after the war.

Another great advantage of such operation for government account would be in the matter of obtaining raw material. If the same government control be applied to the sources and distribution of this material as to the uses of it in the manufacturing plants, not only can the quantities needed be obtained and shortages avoided, but the prices can be held down to a proper level. The great principle of the right of a government in time of war to enforce a priority over private consumers can be invoked to effect a great saving in money and time, and a great increase in the total of production.

What I have been advocating is in effect being put into operation in the United States, although the methods there adopted have been even more drastic that those which I have suggested in that reasonable profits to the manufacturers have not been guaranteed. There the various producers have been notified that they are expected to furnish the government with stated amounts of their products at stated prices. This has been done in the steel industry and in regard to other supplies. The railroads have been notified that they are to give priority to certain traffic. The coal owners have been told the prices they may charge at the mouth of the pit, and orders have been issued in regard to the distribution of the coal. The commissions of middlemen have been limited. There have been a few squeals from those who have been pinched in pocket, but as a whole the demands of the government have been loyally and cheerfully accepted. And we in Canada will surely not admit that we are any less loyal, patriotic, or self-sacrificing than are our brothers in the United States.

Nor do I wish to be understood as saying that nothing of the kind has been done in Canada. There has been a splendid development along these lines of those filling contracts for the Imperial Munitions Board, and the early profiteering in munitions has mainly disappeared. There may be other industries where the same thing has been accomplished, but there certainly are industries where nothing of the kind has been attempted and where some such operation for the account of the Dominion Government would be both possible and useful.

The main thing for the people to appreciate is that in time of war there is no such thing as private business, but that the interest of the state in every industry is paramount. The state will, of course, make to private owners such compensation as may in each instance be just, but the ultimate right of decision as to the use of any industry must lie in the discretion of the state rather than in the whim or desire of any individual.

GOOD WORK FOR SICK WOMEN

The Woman's Medicine Has Proved Its Worth.

When Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies were first introduced, their curative powers were doubted and had to be proved. But the proof came, and gradually the use of them spread over the whole country. Now that hundreds of thousands of women have experienced the most beneficial effects from the use of these medicines, their value has become generally recognized, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the standard medicine for women.

The following letter is only one of the thousands on file in the Pinkham office, at Lynn, Mass., proving that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an article of great merit as shown by the results it produces.

Anamosa, Iowa. — "When I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I suffered with a displacement, and my system was in a general run-down condition. I would have the headache for a week and my back would ache so bad when I would bend down I could hardly straighten up. My sister was sick in bed for two months and doctored, but did not get any relief. She saw an advertisement of your medicine and tried it and got better. She told me what it had done for her, and when I had taken only two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my head began to feel better. I continued its use and now I don't have any of those troubles." — Mrs. L. J. HANNAN, R.F.D. 1, Anamosa, Iowa.

WANTS CAMOUFLAGE FORCE.

Army to Enlist Experts Who Can Deceive the Enemy.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—For the first American "camouflage" unit the army Chief of Engineers issued a call for enlistment of "ingenious young men who are looking for special entertainment in the way of fooling Germans." It is planned to organize a company of camouflieurs largely from among iron and sheet metal worners, sign and scene painters, carpenters, cabinet makers, stage carpenters, property men, plaster moulders, and photographers.

These men will devote their wits to devising ways of deceiving enemy observers, particularly aviators, says a War Department announcement, "wherever a machine gun is set up, or a trench is taken and reversed, or a battery of artillery goes into action, or a new road is opened, or a new bridge is built, or a sniper climbs an old building, or an officer creeps out into an advanced post to hear and observe."

Applicants are asked to communicate with the Chief of Engineers, War Department.

AUSTRIA FACES FAMINE

Effects of Malnutrition Among People Cause Utmost Concern.

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—A cable to the Sun from Rome says:

Reports are reaching the Vatican from diplomatic and ecclesiastical sources in Austria that the food shortage throughout the Empire has become so serious that the effects of malnutrition among the people are causing the utmost concern. The intellectual depression among school children, due to insufficient food, is rendering it practically useless for them to continue their studies.

As an instance of the high prices of foodstuffs, it is said, a sack of flour costs $40 and a pound of pork $2. A general famine seems inevitable.

The Italians Take Position After Position

107 Killed And 86 Wounded In An Air Raid

ITALIANS CONTINUING THEIR STEADY, SUCCESSFUL ADVANCE

Are Spreading Over a Large Tract of Country, Capturing Trench After Trench From Austrians ---British Advance Slightly East of St Julien and Make a Successful Raid Directly North of Lens.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:—

UDINE, September 4.—Field Marshal Von Ars, Chief of Staff of the Austrian army, is reported to be inspecting the Italians front for the purpose of reorganising his troops demoralized by many recent defeats. Meanwhile the Italians continue their steady advance and are spreading over a larger tract of country especially, through Brestovizza Valley and over the Bainsizza Plateau, capturing trench after trench, and in some cases finding contingents of Austrian troops literally exhausted and suffering from thirst and hunger, their means of communication having been cut off by the well directed Italian fire.

Monte San Cabriole still is making desperate efforts at resistance, but the Italian pickets are gradually creeping up its slopes making its fall only a matter of time when, as officers laughingly say here "The Austrians execute another stragetical retreat.

Army officers and others who have read the Austrian war bulletins, are much amused over the statements that the Italians are fleeing when, as a matter of fact, the Austrians constantly are lising erritory. Since the beginning of the present advance the Italians have gained ground every day, while all Austrian efforts to recapture lost positions have been battered by the energetic resistance of Cadorna's army.

LONDON, September 4--The enemy's artillery showed great activity during the night northeast of Ypres, says to-day's official statement. "We advanced our lines slightly northeast of St. Julien. We carried otu a successful raid last night directly north of lens. Our troops killed a number of Germans and captured several prisoners. A hostile raiding party was driven off south of LaBassee."

PARIS, September 4.—French official statement follows: "Not far from Hurtebise Farm the fire of our forces broke an attack led by detachments of the enemy troops, who suffered serious losses without obtaining their objectives.

"In the Champagne district French detachments penetrated the enemy trenches along a front of 800 metres and to the entire depth of the enemy's position. After having destroyed numerous gas tanks and blowing up various shelters, our men returned to their lines bringing some forty prisoners, four machine guns, one trench cannon and other important material.

"In the Argonne another surprise attack to the north of Vienne Le Chateau gave us prisoners. The vicinity of Calais and Dunkirk was visited last night by German aviators, who threw down bombs. Calais reports that several persons were either killed or wounded.

BERLIN, September 4.—Several thousand Russians were taken prisoners by the Germans in their advance in the Riga region, Army Headquarters announced to-day.

More than 150 guns were captured by German forces in Great Jaegel River districts.

ROME, September 4.—Thirty Italian airplanes have dropped nine tons of bombs on the Austrian naval base at Pols, causing destruction and large conflagrations, it is announced officially.

CONSTANTINOPLE, September 4. — Russian troops in northwestern Persia have been pressed back by the Turks, the War Office announces. Turkish detachments advancing in an easterly direction from Merivan are reported to have occupied Garata Bridge.

LONDON, September 4.—Commenting on the rapid increase in shipbuilding to offset the losses from the submarine campaign, the Cardiff correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Company says that two supplements published by Lloyds Shipping Register show that between June 8 and July 17 more than 100 steamers of which 63 are British, were added to the register. Most of these vessels are of large tonnage. The rate of construction is understood to be increasing rapidly.

LONDON, September 4.—Continuing their raids over Belgium, British aviators on Sunday night made attacks in the vicinity of Bruges. A British airplane fought six Germans and shot down one of them. One British machine failed to return.

WASHINGTON, September 4.—Word reached Washington from Paris through official channels to-day that the Entente Allies will soon hold an important military conference in the French capital for the purpose of recanvassing the situation along all the principal fighting fronts. The Russian situation will be considered in the conference on account of the defeats sustained by the Russians.

PARIS, September 4.—Attacks were made by Germans last night on the French lines in Hurtebise region on the Aisne front and east of the Meuse in the Verdun sector. It is officially announced to-day that both were checked by the French fire.

Raids by French troops at Sapigneul between Soussin and Somme-Py in the Champagne and in the Argonne region resulted in the capture of prisoners and material.

LONDON, September 3.—Germany is beginning to talk democratization now, as the first step toward peace. News via Holland to-day announced that at the session of the Reichstag convening September 26, the same coalition of the Centrists and Social-Democrats which precipitated the German Cabinet crisis in July, would again seek surrender by the Kaiser and his ministers of certain of their prerogatives. Emphasis was laid on this "revolt" as part of well-defined yielding to peace.

London could see little in the Berlin reports to-day provocative of the hope of real German reform. It was the same sort of a "revolt" of the left parties in the Reichstag last July that displaced "Von Bethmann-Hollweg for the profoundly junker Michaelis."

HONOUR ROLL IS CONTINUING TO BE HEAVY

OTTAWA, Sept. 6.—With the proportion of killed and died of wounds on the increase the lists of casualties among the Canadians at the front have been growing heavier every day during the past week. Between Saturday noon and Sunday midnight 1,718 names were given out from the Records Office. Last night's list contained 665 names. Since Saturday, Aug. 25 a total of 6,998 casualties have been given out. The artillery and field services have suffered heavily from gas poisoning and the list of "gassed" amon gall services is unusually long Indications are that the casualty lists will continue to be very heavy for some time.

MURDERS PLANNED

Anti-Conscriptionist Dynamiters in Quebec Had Planned to Assassinate Lord Atholstan, Premier Borden and Arthur Meighen

POLICE GIVE DETAILS

MONTREAL, Sept. 4.—With most of the men suspected of complicity in the Cartiersville dynamiting outrage here, under lock and key, the police to-day gave out details of the anti-conscription plots that have been uncovered here and frustrated. The anti-conscription dynamiters had mapped out the following programme: First the murder of Lord Atholstan as he drove from his country home. Next, the dynamiting of His Lordship's home and the offices of the Montreal Star. Then Solicitor General Arthur Meighen was to be assassinated in Ottawa. The Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden, was to be murdered and the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa were to be dynamited. The anarchists had everything prepared to put this programme in execution when the police authorities began to get suspicious of certain ticket of leave elements connected with an organization, including Joseph Leduc, rounded up and forced to commit suicide yesterday at Lachute, and Henri Monette, now being chased in the Laurentian mountains near Ste. Agathe by the police in automobiles. The police believe that the clues they have dug up in connection with plots, point to their having been hatched primarily by prominent men here with strong German affiliations.

The police further announced that men in clerical garb had been shadowed after they had visited the home of suspects and that information in ference to guns and ammunitions said to be in an institution in the city, was being investigated.

FOOD CONTROLLER'S EDICTS ARE NOT CARRIED OUT

MONTREAL, Sept. 4.—The Mail, Conservative, in the course of an editorial entitled "Action Needed," this morning says: "Something of a scandal has arisen in Montreal, and no doubt in other parts of the country, owing to neglect of certain people to obey the orders issued by the food controller. These orders have all the force of law, and can be enforced by heavy penalties. How then it is that they are so flagrantly disregarded. It is openly charged that many restaurants are still selling meat and bacon every day in the week, and that certain grocers continue their sale of canned goods in open defiance of the order prohibiting these sales. What is the food controller going to do about it."

THE RIGA REGION IS ABANDONED BY RUSSIANS

THE LINE IS PIERCED

PETROGRAD, Sept. 4.— The Russian retirement in the Riga region is being continued along the coast in a north-easterly direction, the War Office announced to-day. Hostile ships are shelling the Riga coast.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 3.— The Russians have abandoned Riga, the War Office announces.

The statement says an order has been given for the abandonment of the Riga region on account of the threatening situation.

The German offensive on the Riga front began Saturday by an attack on the Russian Uxkull position, following artillery preparation, which lasted several hours. The Russian troops defending the Dvina River withdrew, and the Germans succeeded in throwing two bridges across the Dvina and passing to the eastern bank.

The Russian infantry, in spite of the brilliant action of artillery, which destroyed one of the enemy's bridge, could not stop the German thrust, and the enemy, taking advantage of this, rapidly developed his success and began an advance northward. Russian counter-attacks against him were unsuccessful.

HUNS PIERCE RUSS LINE.

The text of the statement says:

"On the left bank of the River Dvina, to the west of Riga, our troops, towards the morning of Sunday, retired to the line of Bildertingshef, Medem and Dahlen.

"In the direction of Uxkull, on the north bank of the Dvina, in the course of Saturday and Sunday, the Germans conducted stubborn attacks, chiefly on the front Shtal-Meimuger-Skripto-Lausin, and the confluence of the River Oger. Towards Sunday evening they succeeded in penetrating our positions on the River Jaegel in the region of Maimuger and Skripto.

"Some of the detachments voluntarily left their positions and are retiring to the north. Efforts to restore the positions by counter-attacks gave no definite result. In view of the threatening situation created in the Riga region the order has been given to the abandonment of this region.

"On the remainder of the front there were fusillades which were more intense in the direction of Vila.

"Roumanian front: :In the direction of Pokshani the enemy attacked Roumanian positions near Caurile and Varnitza several times yesterday, but was repulsed with large losses. There were fusillades on the remainder of the front.

"Aviation: On the lower course of the River Zbrucz, Lieutenant Lakman, a French aviator, burned an enemy observation kite balloon."

EVACUATE CITY, TOO.

The War Office informs the Associated Press that the evacuation of the Riga fortified district, referred to in to-day's official communication, includes the city of Riga itself.

A despatch received from The Neves Vremya's correspondent in Riga, sent before evacuation, said the Germans had begun to bombard the city with heavy artillery, causing losses. The correspondent of the same newspaper at Russian Headquarters in a despatch said that there was panic in the city.

107 KILLED AS RESULT OF AIR RAID ON CHATHAM

Casualties Were Naval Ratings Lord French Announces.—86 People Were Wounded in the Raid

RAIDERS GOT AWAY

LONDON, Sept. 4.—In a German air raid last night 107 persons were killed, and 86 wounded, at Chatham, it is announced officially. The victims were naval ratings. Six aeroplanes took part in the raid.

Chatham is on the east bank of the Medway, 307 miles southeast of London, and it is the seat of immense military and naval establishments including State dock yards and arsenal, and extensive barracks. The terms naval ratings applies to the grade of men usually those before the mast. In addition to the naval casualties one civilian was killed and six were injured.

The announcement follows: Lord French, Commander of the British Home Forces, reports that last night's raid in the sir was carried out by about six enemy airplanes which proceeded up the south bank of the Thames estuary to Chatham. Bombs were dropped in the Isle of Thanet and in the Sherness-Chatham area between 10:40 p.m. and 11:50 p.m.

The material damage was slight. Our machines went up and anti-aircraft guns come into action but without result.

BILL WILL BE ENFORCED SAYS PREMIER

MONTREAL, Sept. 4. — Rumours that the Military Service Act would not be enforced are described by Sir Robert Borden in a letter to a correspondent here as baseless. The Prime Minister also says: I am unable to share apprehensions as to the effect of this law in this country. We have sent the Canadian expeditionary force to the battle front in the name of Canada. It is idle and shameless hypocrisy to pretend as the chief faction opposed to this law do, that because these men went voluntarily, we at home have no obligation to support them. It would be a far worse fate for our country than any that has yet been seriously suggested as possible.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 4.—Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch, brother of the former Emperor and his wife, have been placed under arrest in connection with the counter revolutionary plot recently unearthed. Grand Duke Dimitri Paulovitch also has been arrested.

BAD ROADS.

The following from the Ottawa Journal-Press has much to commend it to approval, and rightly heeded, to stimulate productive thought:

"All roads in Ontario east of Toronto are bad," said an Ottawa motorist the other day, returning from an experimental tour. He spoke from a comparative standpoint. He had been also in New York State, where they have lots of real roads now. From a comparative standpoint, he was quite right about eastern Ontario. You may find here and there short stretches of road which are good, and considerable stretches which the natives think are good in August or September, when most of our roads are usually not as bad as they usually are; but speaking by and large, there is not probably a continuous stretch of road ten miles long in eastern Ontario that would not be called hard names in most civilised countries.

Yet this is a rich and prosperous province.

Our roads are bad and our system is bad. We demand money from visiting motorists before we will let them try our bad roads. The province demands that the visiting motorist shall pay a license fee of $15. We suppose the argument for this is that visitors hurt our roads. But really nothing can hurt our roads except earthquakes. On the other hand a visiting motor car assuredly would leave from $10 to $50 a day in this province. Half a dozen people in a motor car, people of the class who tour in motor cars, don't do things on the cheap. Yet we try to keep such people out of the province by a pettifogging license such as hardly any other province or state in North America imposes.

However, that is but a side issue. The real issue is our own home comfort, and our own direct profit from the economy of good roads. A good road costs but little more than a bad one to keep up. Or, rather, where a bad road exists, people along it spend often nearly as much on it to prevent it becoming worse as they would have to spend to keep a good road good. The only real difference is that to begin with, considerable money must be spent to make a road good. But why should that be a serious obstacle? A road is a thing that is going to be used for a thousand years. Borrow the money needed, and if it need be, let the generations of a thousand years to come pay for it.

Surely this war has shown that humanity can afford to spend money for sensible purposes. It has been able to spend a hundred thousand million dollars in three years for purposes that are not sensible, and seem little the worse.

The above remarks serve to show that the government of the province, and the people of the province, do not fully appreciate the importance of good roads; how much they are capable of contributing to the prosperity and comfort of the people.

The government is theoretically interested in good roads, but does not take the leading part that is called for, and leaves too much to uninformed or unconvinced local enterprise.

The government through its Department of Agriculture takes the matter into its own hands; advises, instructs and inspires measures in the interests of agriculture, leaving the details of cooperation to individual farmers whose industry contributes to the success of this cooperation.

The government does not leave agricultural interests in the hands of municipalities, but takes the law and the responsibility.

In the matter of public roads, the government divides the responsibility with municipalities, and the results are hardly as direct and good as could be desired. It seems that the government might well assume full responsibility for public roads, using the general funds of the province for their construction and maintenance.

This would insure general improvement and a rate of progress and sum of results that cannot be expected from local management, where the mass of the people and many municipalities are still under the spell of the haphazard policy and practice of road treatment that has prevailed from pioneer days.

The statute labour system, with all the limited improvements that a century of experience of its futility have forced, is in no way fitted to the requirements of this advanced age when the means of vehicular transportation by highways has been revolutionized.

The chief obstacle to securing good roads consists in the popular failure to appreciate their importance in the interests of the people—of the farmers who constitute the far larger part of our population.

Municipalities in Ontario have in the aggregate voted millions to aid railways, and the province has devoted many more millions of the public money to similar aid—aid that has been of more profit to the railways themselves than to the people.

If similar millions by both had been devoted to building highways in the province, the benefits to the mass of the people would not be as questionable, as spending public money on railways, but direct, palpable, and personal.

It is not questioned that the money municipally spent on highways is to a great extent frittered away, without securing results commensurate.

Does it seem unreasonable to think that if the province would assume the roads of the province and administer them under a well organized system, and on scientific road building principles, the results would be infinitely better?

If the general funds of the province were insufficient they might be supplemented by a special tax, instead of a municipal or local tax. The financial burden would be so generally distributed as to fall lightly on individuals. Ontario's war tax of only a mill on the dollar realizes two million dollars.

The advantage of provincial assumption of highways would be concentration of organisation and management, economical application of the best methods, and universally uniform system. Under provincial management of our highways, the people would get roads of the best quality at, so to speak, wholesale rates, instead of the pitiful results of the retail system as represented by present methods of waste.

LAYING RAILWAYS WHILE BIG SHELLS ALTER GEOGRAPHY

Canadian Construction Corps Doing Remarkable Work at Front.

WAR CORRESPONDENTS, HEADQUARTERS, France.—While splendid regiments from the Mother Country—English, Scottish and Welsh—and Anzacs are fighting their victorious way over ground where Canada first won her spurs, the Dominion corps, under Lieut.-General Currie, are holding the line on another part of the Western front. But there is another happy, unlisted corps of Canadians that is helping the thrust back from the Ypres salient, and to the north and south.

It is over a year since the call came from the British higher command for specialists and more than from any other part of the Empire has that call been answered by Canada. When Lieut.-General Turner, as Canadian commander in-England, turned his attention to the formation of these expert battalions which are necessary to the modern commander as are the ordinary infantry and artillery, he made no mistake in his choice, even taking good fighting officers, who had won fame at railway construction, from their units in the front line. There was grumbling at first, but now there are none but zealous "happy-to-be-in-it" officers and men. Most of the converted battalions still wear their home rank badges, but they are proud to be Canadian Railway Construction Corps.

Recently I wandered along the fringe of the greatest battle the world has ever seen. Canadians may, for a time, proudly call it the Third Battle of Ypres. Where once there had been a Canadian battalion's headquarters, there was a neatly-built, shell-proof series of dugouts, with a British brigadier and his staff busily at work. The walls were panelled with stained wood and brown sacking to match. There were even places for ordnance maps ready when the new tenants had entered that day. Water was laid on even for the general's sleeping section.

A self-contained electric plant lighted the offices and the tunnels where a whole battalion could shelter in comfort. Electric fans kept the atmosphere pure. Canadian tunnelling companies, the same men who bored under the Huns at Messines, built them, and even the Huns would admit they are quite the latest fashion in dugouts.

Outside the entrance, his blueprints spread in front of him, a Vancouver captain was discussing a similar set, somewhere about the place where Canada made her great stand at St. Julian. He had been out in the newly captured trenches that morning, a few hours after our wave had gone forward, and had found, still marked, some of the Canadian graves their comrades left when they retreated that April afternoon.

Network of Rails.

For over a year Canadian railway battalions have been building strategic lines of all gauges up to our former trenches. At first Fritz used to bother them with shells, but this year these expert track-layers have won their own victory. The Huns have discovered that it is cheaper for us to build and repair this steel net work than for them to shell and destroy it. Night and day, in sunshine and rain, though, these Canadian battalions and their British sides of the labour battalions were under fire and casualties were not few. Three days ago one battalion was shelled out of its headquarters, but they completed the spurs which were needed for the big guns on the morning of the attack.

At an aerodrome behind the centre of the advance, I found a French-Canadian pilot who had brought down three enemy planes on the first day of the battle. There were twelve more Canadians in his squadron, and up and down the line there are Canadian flyers in practically every escadrille.

Where a new siding runs off the main railway line—it is built of rails taken from the Transcontinental—there are Canadian casualty clearing stations, where nurses and doctors from Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto are busily attending wounded Englishmen and Highlanders brought down comfortably on light railways which were laid by Dominion troops.

I remember the station nearby when bloody, half-gassed Canadians were sitting with only their field dressings stauching their wounds, waiting for a chance of a lift in an ambulance, heavy shells crumpling in the last hope of relief by train and crashing into the very buildings which gave them shelter. The saving credit side of war has improved.

If the Huns had disabled the track it would not have stopped the work of mercy. There is an alternative route to and from the hospitals. That is the system we work on now: very British in thoroughness, nothing to chance. Never once did the clearing station get filled to confusion.

Building Bridges.

Out on the canal across which our Dominion troops retreated, over a shell-swept pontoon bridge there are more construction men helping the ever-busy Royal Engineers throw across new wooden structures that will bear the heaviest artillery and rolling stock.

The timbers have been sawn and shaped and fitted in a little Canadian mill right under the nose of the enemy, where Amherst boilers drive saws which came from Hamilton and the sawyer and his men still wear the Stetsons of the woods and live on bacon and beans—sometimes, British rations are, they say, too luxurious even for bushmen.

Everyone out here knows that Canada is in this great last battle heart and soul, but in the victorious excitement of a great attack, one is liable to forget these men from overseas who have been plodding away under fire for months to make success doubly sure. They are content and appreciate to the full the praise their imperial comrades have not been slow to give them, and that they receive officially. There are as many honours to be won by them as by their fighting comrades around Lens and they are winning them.

HOW HALDANE TRIED FOR PEACE BUT KEPT BRITAIN'S POWDER DRY

The narrative of Lord Haldane's negotiations and conversations with the rulers of Germany in 1906 and 1912 is an illuminating addition to the secret diplomatic records unmasked by the war.

The revelations are more favorable to Lord Haldane than to his enemies who drove him from the Cabinet. His familiarity with the German tongue and his reputation as an exponent of German philosophy, made him persona grata at Berlin and Potsdam, and the intimacy and confidence which he enjoyed there proved highly useful to British interests at a critical time. While he persistently tried to effect a permanent understanding with Germany he was never deceived as to the real situation. The evidence explodes the legend that he had been hoodwinked by the German diplomats and had helped to lull the British government into a false sense of security.

Lord Haldane found two parties in the inner councils of Germany. One was willing to come to terms with Great Britain even to the extent of curtailing Germany's cherished naval programme as a means of insuring a free field for Germany's economic expansion within a defined sphere in Asia Minor. The other group—it is not surprising to hear that the Crown Prince and Admiral von Tirpitz belonged to it—conspired against an Anglo-German agreement, from motives since disclosed by the war. A conference at Berlin of Britain, Germany, Russia and France was arranged in 1907 with the Kaiser's approval, to discuss the Near Eastern question, but was vetoed by the war faction on the ground that the Bagdad railway was no business of Russia's. During Haldane's second mission another settlement was proposed, but was wrecked by the refusal of the extremists to consider naval retrenchment.

Lord Haldane deluded neither himself nor his associates. He tried to strengthen the elements in Germany favorable to peace, but he aided in preparing his country against the failure of his hopes. As Secretary of War he reorganized the British military system, making good use of his observations in Germany. To him mainly belongs the credit for the wonderful celerity with which the British Expeditionary Force was mobilized and transported at the outbreak of the war. The preparedness of the British navy in 1914, was even a better answer to the charge that the Asquith government had been beguiled by pro-German influences.

The German Junta which was sufficiently powerful to cause the rejection of British overtures, became all powerful and precipitated the war. It refused the substantial gains offered as a peace token, for the mirage of world domination to be won by the sword. Until the German people awaken from this evil spell and break their ruling caste on the anvil of democracy, they will continue to pay for their infatuation in blood and tears.—Globe.

WOULD RUN AROUND THE CITY AT NIGHTS

Labourer Employed By Local Construction Company Acted In a Strange Manner

John Curtis, an American citizen, who for some time past, has been employed by the Canadian Leonard Construction, appeared in Police Court this morning. He was credited with being mentally unbalanced and steps will be taken to have him returned to his home in Baltimore, Maryland. Curtis is a labourer. For the past two weeks he has been acting in a strange manner. He would get up during the night, put on his clothes, and run around the city. Curtis admitted that a brother died of insanity.

Fined Five Dollars.

William White, of Ida, Cavan township, was fined five dollars and costs, amounting in all to eight dollars, for a breach of the automobile act. The offence charged was the absence of a tail light.

Rev. W. Archbold At St. John's Church

The Rev. Walter Archbold D.D., of Ocean City, Maryland, officiated at all the services on Sunday last and preached eloquent sermons at the morning and evening services. Mr. Archbold expressed the great pleasure felt at once more officiating at St. John's, and noted the many improvements made since his last visit to the fine old church. Congratulations were extended to the choir, for keeping up the standard of the services, notwithstanding the fact that so many of their choristers had volunteered for overseas service. At the evening service the preacher urged that a wrong conception of labour and its true meaning, was the cause of so much suffering and fraud, both in production and distribution.

Lying advertisements of shoddy goods would be impossible if the sacred duty of labour was given its proper position in the life of the people in all ranks. "Laborare est Orare," to labour is to pray should be our motto.

HOLLAND REDUCES ITS BREAD RATION.

THE HAGUE.—The Dutch Minister of Agriculture has decided that the bread ration of 2,800 grammes a head must suffice for eleven days after September 2. When bread tickets were first issued seven days was the period for this ratio. Later it was extended to nine days, but the increasing scarcity necessitates a further reduction in the consumption.

Just One Application And The Hairs Vanish

(Toilet Talks.)

Any woman can keep her skin free from unsightly hair or fuzz if she will follow these simple instructions: When hair growths appear, apply a simple paste, made by mixing some water with powdered delatone. Apply this to the hairy surface, and after two or three minutes rub off; wash the skin and the hair is gone. This is a harmless treatment, but be sure that you get the real delatone.

Valour Of A Fighting Family

One of Five Wins the V.C., Another the Military Cross and Three Others Are in the Trenches

It is not often in this war that one family, the McDowell family of Toronto, furnishes five fighting sons; and it is less often that one of them should win the Victoria Cross, the highest recognition of valour, and also the Distinguished Service Medal and another the Military Cross.

Major Fane Wendell McDowell, a graduate of the University of Toronto, who, single-handed, captured sixty Germans, for which he was honoured with a Victoria Cross, presented by his Majesty King George, was the guest of honour on Saturday at the Exhibition directors' luncheon, at which Sir George E. Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce, was the speaker.

That Major McDowell preferred life in the trenches and capturing Huns to speech-making was evident, when amidst a volley of cheers the distinguished officer, in a voice scarcely audible, acknowledged his warm appreciation of the hearty and enthusiastic way in which he had been received.

V. C. in Noble Family.

President Noel Marshall, in referring to the fact that Major McDowell had also been awarded a Distinguished Service Medal, said that another brother had received the Military Cross and three others were in the trenches doing noble service for King and country.

"Major McDowell's voice may have been somewhat mild to-day," added Col. Marshall, "but just imagine what a ponderous voice it must have been when he made sixty Germans surrender." (Cheers.)

EACH HAD A COGNOMEN.

A very tall, thin lieutenant reported in Flanders to a Canadian battalion commanded by a bald, elderly colonel. After a few days he approached his commander and asked permission to air a grievance.

"I wish you would use your influence, sir, to restrain platoon from referring to me as 'Legs,'" he said.

"Sure, my lad, sure," replied the colonel solemnly. "If you'll use yours to stop my whole battalion calling me 'Old Baldy.'"—Youth's Companion.

CULT AIMS WAR'S END BY SIMPLY THINKING ON IT

LOS ANGELES, Cal.—In an effort to end the war by sending positive waves of thought, charged with courage, New Thought teachers of Los Angeles met here to launch a movement that is expected to sweep around the world.

Although meeting for the purpose of concentrating their thoughts on peace, addresses on the object of the meetings, which will be held every Tuesday in the month fo August were made by Mrs. Adeline Becker, Mrs. Ida Mansfield Wilson, and Mrs. W. E. Huntingdon.

"These meetings" explained Mrs. Becker, "are for the purpose of inspiring our troops with courage and to give the United States a sense of its duty to end the carnage. We do not wish to be misunderstood. It is our desire that, as thoughts are things, we should start the world thinking along positive lines.

DOWN FEAR WAVES

"The entrance of our troops into the world struggle gives a new aspect to the war. Up to the present the opposing nations have been almost equally inspired by patriotic desire to win for their own nation. Waves of patriotism would sweep through one great army or the other and it would win an apparent victory. Each side has been helped or hindered by the thought waves of all peoples.

"America brings a new element into the conflict. In on possible way do our men influenced by any thought of patriotism. They are to fight for universal right. They will have all the legions of heaven on their side. They must not be hampered by any waves of fear."

CHARGE WITH COURAGE

The movement, which started in Los Angeles and will be taken up by other organizations in different parts of the United States, might be termed a co-operation of constructive thought. The desire is so to charge the nation with the idea of courage and power that there cannot be any defeats or delays in the speedy ending of the conflict.

Prolong Their Vacation At Their Own Risk

In reply to inquiries from several School Boards in the Province respecting school pupils who have been engaged in farm work, Dr. Payne, Minister of Education, has made public the following statement:

"Representations have been made to the Government that many of those pupils of the schools who have availed themselves of the provisions of the regulations permitting them to leave school last Easter to work on the farms will not have completed their share of the harvesting by the time the schools reopen in September, the Minister of Education, accordingly, now points out that as the dates of the reopening are fixed by statute, he has on authority to alter them. If, however, a School Board decides to admit at a later date the pupils above referred to, it has the power to do so; but, as such action will affect the organization of its school, it should consult the Principal on the subject, and it must be understood that the action of the Board will not be recognized by the Department of Education as a ground for lowering the standard of its examinations."

Black or Stem Rust of Wheat

Some time ago the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa issued a very timely card-poster with wide descriptive coloured border on "Black or Stem Rust of Wheat." The poster in succinct plain language tersely gave advice on the best course to pursue in the preparation of land and seeding to prevent approach of the dread disease which entailed the loss of many millions of dollars to Canada in 1916. A bulletin has now been issued, and can be obtained free by addressing the Publications Branch of the Department at Ottawa, amplifying the advice given in the poster. It is also designed to answer many inquiries that have been received and that prove that the theories possessed regarding the disease are frequently astray. The bulletin explains that there are several distinct kinds of rust and defines them. It tells of the cause of rust and of the infection of the wheat plant; gives particulars of the red summer stage and of the black or winter stage of the disease, details the action of the fungus on the host plant and makes a specialty of describing the relation of stem rust to the barberry. "We regard the barberry in Canada," say the authors of the bulletin, "as a known contributory feator to grain rust. In this attitude we are supported by practically every scientific observer on this continent and we, therefore, would strongly recommend the complete extermination of this shrub, at any rate throughout the regions of the Dominion principally devoted to grain growing. There are other factors contributory to the severity of grain rust over which we have no control—weather conditions for one—but the question of the barberry is one that might easily be overcome. It is one of the principal precautionary measures that should be taken in the interest of the grain-producing regions throughout the Continent of America." The bulletin proceeds to tell in detail of precautions that can be taken to reduce losses from grain rust.

KEPT HIS WORD.

Man Who Fired Hotel de Ville in Franco-Russian War Dies in Exile.

CHAUX DE FONDS, Switzerland. —Louis Pindy, the man who set fire to the Hotel de Ville in Paris in May, 1871, and who was one of the last four members of the Paris Commune exiled in Switzerland, has just died at the age of 77. The remaining three are Protot, who was minister of justice in the government of the Commune, with Louclas and Gerardon, two inconspicuous members of the Commune.

Pindy was in command at the Hotel de Ville. He declared that if obliged to quit the building, he would leave it in flames, and kept his word. Condemned to death for that act of incendiarism, he hid ten months in the rue Saint Maur, manufacturign jewelry meanwhile. Denounced by his partner, he escaped to Switzerland by way of Mulhausen and settled at Chaux de Fonds where he was employed for forty-four years by the same firm making watches.

Interest In Restrictions On Canned Goods

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs appeared in the Canadian Grocer:

Interest in the grocery trade was focussed on the recent order of the Food Controller in prohibiting the sale of canned goods in Canada in the West until October 1, and in Eastern Canada until October 15. Wholesalers assert they there will probably be very little difference in trade returns as a result, owing to the small consumption of this particular class of canned goods during the month of September and October. There is only one class of people on whom it may bear somewhat heavily, namely, the farming communities of the West during the harvesting period, as they are big consumers of canned commodities at that time. Prices on canned salmon were not announced during the week, there being some possibility that domestic trade might not have the option on one-pound sockeye talls at all as the pack is expected to be light.

There was a movement toward higher prices in provisions, induced by the recent high price of hogs. Live hogs, however, took a big drop and this may presage easier prices in meats, coming as a result of the British embargo on bacon. Both butter and eggs were higher. Cheese was also slightly firmer in price. New crop honey is reported light and prices are higher in consequence.

There was considerable activity in the dried fruit market during the week, as the California Raisin Association named their opening prices, which were considerably higher than the opening of last year. Prunes also advanced at Coast prices. Rices are in firm market and a more general shifting toward higher levels took place during the week. Other lines in which changes were registered during the week include sardines, lobsters, compound jams, shrimps, icings, baking powder, marmalade.

In the sugar market steadiness prevailed with a disposition to mark time in view of an easier position in the primary market in the United States. Ontario winter wheat flour was lower in price. Manitoba flour remained unchanged and mills are booking ahead for no greater period than thirty days, owing to the uncertainty over control of the industry. Business was fairly good in grocery trade during the week.

$40,000,000 IN PENSIONS

Estimated Yearly Outlay in Canada at Close of War.

CALGARY, Aug. 31.—General dissatisfaction was expressed by the Great War Veterans' Association here last night when they appeared in a body before the Board of Pension Commissioners to make suggestions as to adjustment in pension plans. The veterans charged that the board had been created and then chloroformed so that it could not take action.

The commissioners estimate that Canada will be paying out $40,000,000 a year at the close of the war in pensions.

PTE. WEGG DESCRIBES LIFE IN A HOSPITAL

Wounded Peterboro' Soldier Also Gives an Interesting Account of How the Wounded Are Sent Back to Base.

WAS HIT IN THE HAND

Mrs. Ernest Wegg, 223 Antrim street has received the following interesting letter from her husband, Pte. Ernest Wegg, formerly of the 93rd Battalion who was wounded some weeks ago.

Hut E1, F. Div., Can. Con. Depot,
Epsom, England
August, 17, 1917

Dear Wife,—I am going to try to give you a summary of my experiences since the night I was wounded to give you an idea of the way they have of getting a wounded man from the trenches to the train, then to the base to Blighty.

"I got mine" about 11.30, June 30, and it was only a matter of minutes till I was at the dressing station, as I was close to it when I was hit. Sometimes it is several hours before a man can get out from the front line to our own dressing station, but they always try to get them out without loss of time.

Well I sat in the dressing station for about two hours, waiting for some other chaps to get fixed up so we could go out together.

At last we started, one stretcher cases and four walking cases. We had about a mile and a half to go to the advance station of the 9th Field Ambulance when we were freshly bandaged and sewed with a hot bowl of cocoa. And just as day broke we were put in a motor ambulance and at a speed of about three miles an hour around shell holes in the road and sometimes through them, we travelled about three miles farther to another dressing station. We had our wounds dressed again here and were inoculated. About 7.30 we had breakfast and between eight and nine two ambulances left with loads going farther back again. As I was not badly wounded I was not taken away till afternoon as there was more need for the serious cases to be hurried out.

I was taken about two o'clock in an ambulance, along with four other cases and passed about twelve miles back to a sort of half-way house. I was only there about ten minutes till I was in another ambulance and this time we made about fifteen miles to the C.C.S. of Casualty Clearing Station.

I arrived there about four-thirty and about five o'clock was put on the operating table where I saw a great variety of pictures.

When I came to I was lying in a long wooden hut along with about twenty others, all of us on stretchers raised off the floor by means of wooden horses.

I didn't know until the next day that I had had my finger amputated. The next morning, July 2nd, we were loaded into a hospital train and by 9.30 that night I was having a hot cup of cocoa in a base hospital.

I will conclude this letter another time as I haven't the time just now.

Hoping this will find you and the children as well as it leaves me, I remain as ever.

Your loving husband,
ERNIE WEGG

Epsom, Eng., Aug. 26, 1917.

Dear Wife,—I will take up my story where I left off and tell you of the way I was treated in hospital.

On the morning of July 3rd I asked the night sister before she was relieved if I couldn't get up around the ward as I didn't feel like lying in bed. She said: No, stay in bed a day or so, you need the rest. I told her I was tired of resting, but she wouldn't let me up. When the day sisters came on I got up and went out for a wash to the wash room at the end of the ward, and when I came back I lay on top of the clothes and read until they came to change the dressing on my hand. When the sister saw me up, she said: "You must be a Canadian." I said I was. She said, "You Canadians are the limit; we can't keep you in bed." I said I didn't think mine was serious enough to keep me in bed. She saw that I was feeling alright so told me I could stay up and could go out in the sun if I liked, so by night I had pretty well explored the grounds.

For a few days I was the only Canadian in the ward and they called me Canada. Then another Canadian came in and they called him Yank. In a few days more an artillery chap came in who had been burnt by a cordite explosion. His hair was all singed yellow and he had some yellow stuff all over his face and neck. They called him Canary. They were always confounding the three of us, as we were all Canadians, so a sergeant named me "Three-fingered Jake," which was later shortened to plain "Jake," and it stuck until I left for England.

About two days a week a sister came from our ward, 'F,' and one from 'E,' used to take us out for a walk. There was generally from 15 to 20 walking patients in the two wards. We used to walk about a mile and a half and then play ball for an hour and walk back. I got to be quite handy with my left hand. One day there was a hot one coming my way right off the bat. I forgot that I had a crippled hand and reached for it. By good luck I missed it, but got severely reprimanded by the sister for being so careless.

Our ward beat E one day by a score of 27-17. They then challenged us in turn to whist, checkers, euchre, dominoes, quoits and auction bridge, and the only thing we went under on was quoits. There was quite a rivalry between the two wards then and they wanted to play another game of ball, but just when we had made arrangements for another game, they cleared out nearly all the chaps that were strong enough to play.

One day we were out for a walk with three sisters and passing a party of soldiers drilling on a field. The sisters were remarking how smart they looked and asked if we would not give them a little drill. I said I'd oblige them, so got them in line on the road and started detailing the position of attention. "Heels together, toes at an angle of forty-five degrees, eyes looking straight to the front. Hands at the sides; thumbs in line with the seam of the trousers." Just when I got that far they suddenly broke ranks and made for me with their canes raised threatening and I beat a hasty retreat, amid loud applause from the rest of the boys.

I was there for five weeks and had a fine time of it, although very often I got blamed for things I didn't have a hand in at all. But if there was any devilment afoot I got the blame for it anyway.

One night there was a concert on in one of the wards and I got tired of sitting on the side of a bed and I slipped out the back way and was sneaking around the building when I ran across three girls crouching under a window listening to the concert I came around the corner suddenly and gave them such a fright that they all screamed. They had a vicious little brute of a dog with them and it came for me. I had to fight the brute off and it snarling and barking, and the girls laughing.

The windows of the hut were open and those inside couldn't hear the singing for the din outside, and every window was filled with heads to see what the row was about, and just when I thought I was getting nicely away, I heard the voice of the ward matron sing: So it's you Canada; I might have known that. She started in to scold me, but I was laughing so heartily I wasn't paying attention to what she was saying. She couldn't hold out;; she had to laugh, too. She told me to go straight to my ward and go to bed. As that was where I was going anyway, it was no punishment.

When I had been there about a month they made our ward an officers' ward and I was transferred along with three other lads to "J" ward and a few days later the M. O., when looking at my hand, decided I would do better and get better treatment in England.

You may believe this was a surprise to me and I was doubtful even after my "ticket" was made out. About one o'clock one morning the sister called me, and I must say she didn't have to pull me out that morning. I was on my feet before she had her hand off my shoulder, and about 2.00 I was on the train.

Well I think I'll have to close again as they'll be charging me extra postage.

With love to all, I remain as ever your loving husband.

ERNIE WEGG.

WHAT THE PETERBORO BUSINESS COLLEGE MEANS TO THE CITY

What a business, like the Peterborough Business College means to Peterborough, is interesting when put into actual figures. In conversation with Mr. J. A. McKone, the energetic principal, he mentioned some surprising features in this connection. Averaging the number of pupils for the winter term, at 125, that would mean at $5.00 a week, $625.00, and continuing for six months would amount to $15000.00, which is left with Peterborough people. Add to this at least another $5000.00 paid in board bills during the other six months of the year, and anywhere from $5000.00 to $10,000.00 spent for clothing, and it means that the Business College is directly responsible for bringing about $30,000 a year to the city.

This number of pupils are annually graduating from the College and taking positions, which bring them a handsome return for their investment. Mr. McKone says the first year earnings of the pupils placed, during one year, amounts to an average of $50,000.00, a result that could scarcely be realized if they had not acquired a thorough business training. All of which gives one an idea of the importance to the city of an institution like the Busines College.

An added feature of the College's value to Peterborough is its advertising methods, which do much to keep Peterborough in the eyes of the young people, of a very extensive district, some pupils coming from most distant corners of Ontario.

Seen at the Toronto Exhibition

The Chapman Ball-Bearing Company of Canada, Limited.

This company is nothing, if not progressive. Each year their exhibit has been a feature of the display in the Machinery Hall at the Canadian National Exhibition. It contains a complete line of their ball-bearings for line shafting, fitting any standard hanger frame and showing the range of sizes from one to six and one-half inches.

The many adaptations of the bearing to loose pulleys, friction clutch pulleys, counter-shafts, car wheels, etc., are attractively displayed, and the various parts are so shown as to demonstrate the care and accuracy of finish that is used in its manufacture. The ease with which the bearing runs is illustrated by a running shafting and loose pulleys with thread as a belt.

There is also shown a full line of their elevating trucks for factory and warehouses, ranging in size from one-half to two tons. All the shafting in Machinery Hall is equipped with Chapman ball-bearings.

Within the past year they have opened a branch in the United States for the manufacture of their products under the name of the Transmission Ball Bearing Company, 1950 Military Road, Buffalo, New York. They are one of the very few manufacturers of iron goods having United States branches, and a large number of the most progressive American manufacturers have already adapted the bearings on account of their big efficiency. These include such well-known plants as the Bethlehem Steel Company, the Pierce Arrow Company and others of similar standing.

One of the most interesting features of the exhibit is the model of a British tank, fully equipped with Chapman ball bearings. Altogether the exhibit from a mechanical and artistic standpoint will repay a visit.

After Vacation Peel Your Discolored Skin

Women returning from the seaside with browned, reddened or freckled complexions will be wise in immediately taking up the mercolised wax treatment. Weather-beaten skin had best come off, for no amount of "beautifying" will ever make such skin pretty to look at. The surest, safest, easiest way to shed the despoiled cuticle is with the treatment suggested. Put the wax on before retiring, as you would cold cream, and rinse it off next morning with warm water. Minute particles of scarf skin will peel off day by day, gradually showing the healthy, youthful skin beneath.

One ounce of mercolised wax, obtainable at any drug store, is enough to make any discolored or spotted complexion clear, white and satiny soft. Its action is so gentle no harm is caused and the face shows no trace of its use.

England Now Planning For Easy Divorce

LONDON.—That there are from 250,000 to 300,000 persons in Great Britain legally separated yet not divorced is one of the statements in the report of the royal commission which has lately been investigating the divorce problem.

This moreover, is only a beginning. Other multitudes of men and women who have been married continue not only married, but without even legal authority to live apart, although they do not and could not live together. Probably this second classification is larger than the first.

Urge Divorce Reform.

After surveying these conditions and their results parliament has established a joint committee to promote the cause of marriage and divorce reform. For many years the question has been before the public. Determined opposition by the church and other agencies prevented accomplishment in a moderate measure; the tide of human misery was dammed up; and now it is likely to be let loose with a much more radical measure than a decade ago would have sufficed.

The joint committee has undertaken to obtain passage of a law permitting absolute divorce in most of these cases of hopeless separation. Judicial separation orders are now issued on account of cruelty, desertion, drunkenness, and many other offenses, but these do not constitute divorce.

New Law Liberal.

Commonly the husband is required to pay maintenance fixed by the court; often in cases in which the husband has been grievously wronged. If he doesn't pay he can be and often is locked up. But however greatly both husband and wife may wish it, they cannot be divorced unless there has been adultery on the wife's part or adultery and also cruelty on the husband's.

Almost a decade ago an effort was made to obtain legislation providing that in cases of legal separation the court, after five yers, should, on the application of either party, make decree of absolute divorce. That bill was smothered. The new measure, which is likely to become law before the war's end, is much more liberal. It permits the decree to be issued after three years of separation was by consent, by court decree, or otherwise.

Church Antagonistic.

Even advocates of easier divorce in some cases fear that this measure would make it too easy. But the people who have investigated do not. They describe fearfully immoral conditions wisely existent because of the present difficulties of getting divorce. Immorality, illegitimacy, disease, and a fearful number of cases of bigamy are numerated. Husband and wife legally bound to each other, yet legally separated, forced to lives of celibacy, lose all moral standards. The fact that they are commonly poor makes the results yet worse.

It is a question largely concerning, the poorer people, for at best it costs more to get a divorce than most people can pay. The story has been often repeated of the cynical judge who said the divorce laws of England were perfectly even handed as between rich and poor; either rich or poor petitioner might have a divorce if he had a case and about $2,500 for expenses.

The church has been especially antagonistic to remedial legislation. But the church influence is not so potent as formerly. The war has brought conditions in which the need of meeting this emergency is more pressing than ever, while at the same time it has weakened the hold of the church owing to the attitude of most of the higher ecclesiastics on many war issues.

GERMANS TAX COAL EXPORTS

Sweden Greatly Disturbed by an Impost of $6.70 Per Ton.

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 4.—Swedish industrial and business circles are stirred greatly over an export tax of 23 kroner ($6.70) a ton, which Germany has put on all coal for shipment to Sweden. The tax is effective at once, no matter when the order for the coal was given. Germany also has imposed a tax on parcel post, payable after August 15.

In some circles it is urged that Sweden retaliate by putting a tax on Swedish products, especially iron ore, but nothing has yet been decided.

Export licenses for wood pulp for England, France, and Italy have been extended greatly in the past two weeks. This is taken here as a sign of better commercial relations between Sweden and the Entente Powers. Altogether permission has been granted for the exportation of 120,000 tons of wood pulp. This action is supposed to be in connection with the energetic efforts of the Government to persuade Swedish shipowners to send their vessels to England.

PANIC ON GORGE CAR.

Repetition of Dominion Day Accident Narrowly Averted.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Sept. 4.—Saturday morning there was almost a repetition of the Dominion Day gorge accident. A gorge car running towards Lewiston on the American side struck about a ton of rock which had fallen on to the track from the cliff above, the motorman not noticing the obstruction in time to stop his car. The impact sent the car flying across the second track and the motorman managed to set the brake just as it was off the edge heading for the river. There were a lot of passengers on board and there was a panic.

The place where the accident happened is just at the Whirlpool Rapids, a short distance north of the lower bridge, a quarter mile south of where the Dominion Day horror occurred. The car would have dropped thirty feet into the rapids.

HOLLY WAS TO HAVE BEEN MARRIED HERE

Touching Scene Follows the Arrest Here of Man Wanted For Theft

County Constable W. J. Simpkins of Simcoe County arrived in the city to-day at noon and will take back to Bradford with him, George Holley, who was arrested here by Detective Newhall. Holley who has a record in Simcoe County is wanted for theft. The accused left Bradford after being caught in a hen-house. The owner came out and threatened to shoot Holley. The prisoner who was operating after dark was unable to see his accuser and decided to escape while the going was good. He left behind a horse and buggy; also his coat. As a matter of fact the owner of the chickens never had a gun, but the blackness of the night aided the owner in his race.

WEDDING BELLS.

When Holley fled to Peterborough he brought with him a young girl from Newmarket. The girl with her mother, accompanied Holley to this city and a wedding was staged for Wednesday. The arrest of the prisoner gave rise to a very touching farewell in which the girl promised to ever reign in faithful to the prisoner even though he should get two years in prison. All day the girl and her mother haunted the vicinity of the police station and for a few minutes this morning the girl was allowed to converse with the accused through the bars of his cell.

A RAID ON FRENCH COAST

Special to the Examiner.

LONDON, Sept. 4.—Shortly before nine o'clock explosions and heavy firing could be heard in the direction of Dunkirk and Calais, and it was thought that a raid on a large scale was taking place along the French coast. This lasted until nearly midnight, when warnings were given and shortly afterwards bombs began to drop. Anti-air craft guns went into action and through the din and whirr of airplanes, engines could be heard. Searchlights were brought into operation, but they failed to pick out the raiders.

WM. ROBERTS AND SONS' GREAT RECORD IN TORONTO

First Time Showing at the Toronto Industrial Exhibition

Messrs. Wm. Roberts & Sons of the Dickson Company farm, who have been showing their stock at Ottawa Exhibition, have for the first time made an exhibit at the Toronto Fair in Percherons and have cleaned the boards in some classes. Roberts & Sons are famous all over Ontario as breeders of pure bred Percheron horses and their stock can be found on dozens of farms where the owner prizes pure bred stock.

In the hog class, however, it appears that they will become as prominent as they are in the Percheron horse class.

In Chester White hogs they won six firsts, two seconds, four thirds, three fourths, and two specials—silver medals, winning the sweepstakes for the best boar and sow, any age, the sow winning the championship for three years in succession.

In registered Percherons their brood mare, Marguerite, won second in a field of eight, and they also get second in the two year old class with a string of three horses they won first prize.

Mr. Robers and his sons are to be congratulated on the success so far obtained.

The general purpose string of four horses will show on Thursday, and it is not too much to predict a first prize for this entry.

Mr. Charles Cook is assisting in getting the horses ready for the show ring.

A QUICK DRIVE TOWARDS PETROGRAD IS NOW EXPECTED

With the Fall of Riga British Observers Expect Germans to Make a Dash For the Russian Capital

CAN BE STOPPED

Special S.N.S. Wire to Examiner:

LONDON, Sept. 4— A quick, hard drive from Riga toward Petrograd is London's forecast to-day of Germany's Russian campaign. Military experts believe Germany will do her utmost in speed. The Germans must go far in the three hundred mile journey toward the Russian capital before freezing weather sets in, if they expect to rely on the German Baltic fleet. They may also be expected to hurry with all speed to cover as much ground as possible before Gen. Korniloff can carry out his plans for a regeneration of the Russian army. If the Russians manifest the proper fighting spirit, military authorities here to-day agreed they will easily block the German drive. The ground from Riga to Petrograd is of a nature lending itself readily to the defence. It is marshy and studded with small lakes and waterways. Small bodies of Russian troops could play havoc with greatly superior attacking forces attempting an advance over such broken terrain. In the opinion of observers here much depends on the Russian fleet in stopping the expected German drive. If mutinous sailors can be quelled and discipline and fighting spirit recovered, the Russian fleet could effectually hamper, perhaps prevent, operations by a German fleet in the Baltic. No attempt was made to minimize the effect of Riga's fall on the German population. Battered badly on the west front by the British and French drives of the past few months, and with the Austrians losing ground every hour under the Italian assault, the German militarists were badly in need of a German victory to hearten the public. They will make the best of Riga's fall.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 4.— Emperor Wilhelm exulted with his people today in the capture of Riga from the Russians as Berlin dispatches quoted this extract from a message sent by him to the Kaiserin: "This is a new milestone of German strength and unerring will. May God help us further."

The Kaiser also wired his congratulations to Prince Leopold whose troops took the Russian city: "Your far-seeing leadership and iron will for victory guaranteed this fine success," he declared. "Onward with God."

THREE IN A FAMILY HELPED BY TANLAC

"In Every Case It Has Given Fine Results," Says Well Known Piano Man

"It has not only done me a world of good, but my wife and daughter have also been wonderfully benefitted and hereafter, Tanlac is a family medicine at my house." This statement was made recently by Arthur Wakelin, who was for twenty-six years, employed by the Heintzman Piano Company and resides at 52 Ford street, Toronto.

"I simply needed a general, all round building up." Mr. Wakelin continued, "and Tanlac has done that very thing. I am getting along in years and I never thought anything could give me such quick and satisfactory results. I had been in a general run-down condition for about a year and while I wasn't sick enough to stay in bed, I just felt like my strength was all gone. I would get up in the mornings tired and all fagged out, feeling like it would be impossible for me to do my work, and the least little job would tax my strength to the utmost. I simply felt unfit for anything and knew I needed something to correct my trouble and build me up.

"I was almost obliged to have some confidence in Tanlac after reading such high endorsements, and in just a few days after I started on it I began to feel my old time vim and vigor returning. I have now taken two bottles and that old worn-out, don't care feeling has left me entirely and I am feeling fine. I get up in the mornings feeling refreshed and brimful of new life and energy, and fit and ready for anything that comes to hand.

"My wife, seeing the good Tanlac did me, decided to try it, too. She had been suffering from a bad case of stomach trouble for several years, and while she tried many different medicines nothing ever helped her until she got Tanlac. She had no appetite and, honestly, I don't believe she ate as much in a week as the average well person eats in one day. What little she did eat disagreed with her and she suffered with indigestion terribly. She had tried so many things without benefit that she had almost lost hope of ever finding anything to help her. But Tanlac seemed to get in its work right off and three bottles have straightened her up until she can eat anything she wants without the slightest trouble afterwards.

"After seeing the good it did my wife and myself our daughter began taking it, too, and in every case it has given fine results, far better than we expected. So we are all indebted to Tanlac and hereafter it's going to be a family medicine in my house.

Knut Belting With U.S. Army

Former Peterborough Pitcher Is Going to Fight the Germans

His many friends in Peterborough will be interested in learning that Knut Belting, the former Peterborough Canadian League pitcher, who has made this city his winter home for the past few years, is now in the United States army. He has been called out in the draft at his home town, Rockford, Ilinois, and has waived all claims to exemption. The Rockford Register-Gazette says: "Knut B. Belting, Jr., 1301 14th avenue, number 608, who passed the examination, was the first man this morning who waived all claims to exemption and signified his willingness to serve."

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

ed by Miss Philomeane Feeley, from her brother, Private Louis Feeley, who went overseas with the 93rd, and was afterwards transferred to the 1st Canadian Battalion in France. From a private in France,

You may read of the marches and battles,
And who's gone and won the V..C.
You may read all about how we peppered the Huns,
With the best "busting" stuff there could be;
What whatever you do, don't forget now
'Mid the stories of great bravery,
That a chap who ain't mentioned is doing his bit.
Private Smithers of Company B.

We can't all win distinctions and stripes, sir,
Or where'd be the rank and the file?
But you bet when the shells are a-whizzing around,
Or the bayonet's working in style,
That the private I name isn't nursing his gout,
In a "comfy" arm chair at the front;
He ain't mentioned, and lo! he don't mind it,
But of fighting it's he gets the bunt!

Now this private he ain't a-complaining,—
He's only to do what he's bid,
But a girl that's at home, sir, has got to be told
That this private he did what he did.
For it's Britain and duty and honour
That brought him out here to this scrap,
But you'll please to remember the girls got to know
How he did it whatever may hap.

For if she in th 'excitement forgets him—
Whatever the verdict may be,
He'd much rather die in a trench right away,
And be posted as "missing"-d'ye see?
Than live to go home with the grief and the shame
That a girl can so treacherous be;
So bid her remember he's doing his bit—
Private Smithers of Company G.

OTTAWA, Sept. 2.—A memorandum issued by the Militia Department today says: "It may not be generally appreciated throughout the country that by order-in-Council which was passed on July 20, provision was made that all letters posted by members of the overseas forces in France England or elsewhere, addressed to friends or relatives in Canada would be forwarded free of postage and untaxed. This step was taken in co-operation with the British Government who have extended similar privileges to all members of the British forces serving in the various theatres of war."

Pte. C. H. O'Reilly, who enlisted with the 35th Battalion, Toronto, in March, 1915, was wounded at La Coulotte on June 2nd. In a letter to his uncle, Mr. Charles O'Reilly he relates as follows, the particular action near Lens in which he was wounded:

Hardon War Hospital, Epsom,
Surrey, England.

You ask me to let you know how it occurred, and the extent of the wound I will try to give you an idea, although it is impossible for any one to imagine what it is like at times.

It was about ten o'clock on the night of Saturday, June 2nd, when we left the position we were in, to go to the front line. Each man was carrying a 1,000 rounds of ammunition for guns besides his rifle, and 'harness' or equipment. We arrived at the front line at five minutes to twelve. We were resting in the trench, as best we could, while waiting for the barrage to open up. I think that last minute was the longest minute I ever put in.

But all of a sudden there was the most terrific roar, and the shells started to whistle over our heads, on their way to the Hun's trenches. As soon as the guns opened up, we received the order, and then it was over the top for us.

We just got nicely started, when Fritz's artillery opened up, and the shells started to drop, first to one side then to the other and then behind us.

We got along fairly well, over barbed wire, and through shell holes, when we came to the German front line.

Our first and second waves of infantry had gone ahead of us, and there was every indication of the good work they had done. We eventually got to what we thought a good position, and there we mounted our guns in preparation for a counter attack.

The position that we had chosen, was an old gun-pit, that the German artillery had abandoned when Vimy Ridge was taken from them. There was a dugout about forty feet in depth so after the guns were all ready, and a sentry on each, the remainder of us went down to have a rest. All went well, until about six o'clock next morning, (Sunday June 3rd) when we noticed some Germans in a trench about seventy yards in front of us.

We were not sure whether they were getting ready for a counter attack or not, but we took no chances, so we laid our guns, and all was ready to open up if it was necessary. About six-thirty we saw them coming, so we waited until they got about fifty yards from us, and then pressed the trigger.

We had two guns, and each firing at the rate of 400 rounds per minute.

The attacking party proved to be bombers, and they must have had orders to take the position at any cost, for they came right on, and the closer they got the worse it was for them.

Their party numbered about thirty and ours was only fourteen, seven to a gun. One of the enemy bombs fell about five feet in front of our guns, but luckily, we saw it coming, and most of us got under cover. Two of the boys were slightly wounded, and the gun was covered with dirt and it was almost impossible to see anything for smoke.

We got the gun, and saw that it was still in good condition, so we decided to move from that particular spot.

We went to a position about twenty yards away, and opened up again, only two being at the gun at a time.

Another fellow and I were at the gun now firing when I felt a funny sensation in my left leg. I looked down and saw that my puttee was all over blood, and there were pieces of bone sticking on it. Another fellow took my place at the gun, but I am sorry to say that he was more unfortunate that I and a minute later he was wounded in the arm, and the gun was out of action. I had crawled into a shell hole when I was trying to get to the dressing station, and could not get out of the blamed thing again. I think the three quarters of an hour I spent in that hole—well I can't explain it. The shells were flying over my head, and then one would burst to one side of me and I was wondering where the next would land. Much to my relief some stretcher bearers came along and carried me back to the advance dressing station. I was sent from there to the clearing station. There they operated on me, and found that it was an explosive bullet that had done the damage.

The wound is in the calf of the leg. I was told at the clearing station, a couple of days later, that our fellows were forced back that morning, but counter attacked that night again and held the position. It was just in front of the town of La Coulette, that we were then, which is on the outskirts of Lens. I saw by the papers, some time ago, that we had taken La Coulette, but I know that they did not get it without some hard fighting.

Well I think you must be tired of this so we'll change the subject.

Habit Of Theft Conquers Love For Young Wife

YONKERS, N.Y. — Leonard Solomon, 86 years old, has passed sixteen years of his life in prison, and probably will spend more there. Last summer he was serving a two-year term in Sing Sing for burglary when Miss Anna Gordon, of a respectable Ossining family, called at the prison to see what welfare work she could do for the prisoners.

Solomon was a member of the Mutual Welfare league. She met him and he told her his story. He was one of those fellows who never had a chance. The police always were hounding him and driving him into crime.

Engaged to Wed Convict.

Anna, an unsophisticated country girl, with the milk of human kindness unsoured, was touched by the story. She called on Solomon frequently, and before he had finished his term they were engaged to be married, the proviso being that Solomon was to "live straight" for a year and then she would become his bride.

Part of that year of probation and "living straight" Solomon spent in Sing Sing. He was released in October and made several trips to Ossining, always telling Anna he was "straight." They were married six weeks ago, when the year of probation had expired, and he installed his bride in a flat at 501 West Forty-seventh street, Manhattan.

Arrested with Jewelry.

Solomon and Nathan Harris, who had been released from prison, were arrested here as they were leaving the home of John Griffith, at 11 Delavan terrace, with about $200 worth of jewelry. Solomon gave the police his address in New York City, and said he guessed they would find a girl there who would take his arrest pretty hard.

They found the girl. She became hysterical and fainted several times. Still having faith, she called on Solomon, but she was downcast and broken hearted as she later left for her old home in Ossining.

SOLDIERS' WIVES IN SOUTHERN STATES HAVE REGIMENT OF THEIR OWN

SAN ANTONIO, Texas.—Not to be outrivalled by the Russian battalion of women Texas and Oklahoma wives of soldiers in regular National Army and National Guard units are organizing a regiment of about twelve hundred and offering to follow the army to France and help in the world war in any way the War Department sees fit, even to entering the trenches.

While offering to shoulder rifles and stand by the guns the women of the Southwest believe there is other valuable service they can render the American army with the expeditionary forces, such as guard duty, patrol work, signal corps service, thereby releasing many men for the actual battle lines. Selection of soldiers in the regiment is being made with care for fitness and an effort to avoid those with dependents.

Incidents From Exemption Boards In American Cities

ROCHESTER, Aug. 31.—He was a "husky" looking man, with the build of a soldier and a self-reliant air as he appeared before the First district board. He would have made a good impression at sight if he had not filed a claim for exemption, and his only reason was that he was a Canadian, an alien. He said that he had been in the United States about three years and had been constantly employed.

"Have you taken out your first papers?" he was asked.

"What would be the use?" he countered.

"When a person seeks sanctuary in the country and earns his living there," the board member said, "he usually has self-respect enough to at least try to become a citizen of that country. Now, did you come to the United States to escape military duty?"

"I did not," the Canadian answered, angrily.

"Do you want to enter the Canadian army?"

"No," he said in the same tone. "I don't believe in war."

"My personal opinion is that you arrived in the United States immediately after volunteers were called for in Canada," the examining member remarked. Close examination of the Canadian developed the fact that the opinion was well founded. The man will be certified to the Canadian government, and as he is physically fit the indications are that he will shortly go abroad for a visit to England and France.

Wife Learns Something.

A man and his wife appeared before one of the boards to support his claim for exemption, which was based upon the fact that he had a wife who had no relatives who would come to her assistance if he were taken. He said that he was working for a certain large manufacturing company and was getting $12.50 a week, and had been employed about four years.

"Do you mean to tell me," the chairman of the board said as he leaned forward in his chair, "that you have worked for this firm four years and are getting only $12.50 a week?"

"That's what I said."

"You'll have to push up the figures a peg," the chairman said. "You are getting more than that."

"Counting what I make extra I get $14 a week," the man admitted, and his wife faced him and opened her eyes. They were excused.

At the door the man turned and came back.

"After what you've made me admit," the man said, "the trenches in France haven't got anything on what I've got to face."

The members of the board watched the fellow as he went out.

"It looks to me as if he had been holding out about $1.50 a week," the chairman remarked, as he turned to the next claimant.

Shows Borrowed Children.

An Italian living in the village appeared before the Fairport board, District, Monroe county, and claimed exemption on the ground that he had two children. He had the youngsters with him.

"Where's the mother, your wife?" asked James D. McCartney, chairman of the board.

"No have a mother," the man answered.

"Where is your wife?" Mr. McCartney asked. "We want to see her."

The man raised his hands above his head.

"No got a wife," he protested.

An interpreter was called, and from the witnesses the applicant for exemption produced it was learned that not only had he no wife but that he had borrowed the children from a neighbour. His claim was disallowed.

Quietus on Village Gossip.

In one of the villages a young man claimed exemption on the ground that his wife was dependent upon him. Some of the neighbours heard of it and they proceeded to circulate a story to the effect that the wife had property of her own. The story came from several directions to the divisional board, and the members summoned one of the talkative neighbours. The neighbour said he had heard that the wife owned a certain lot.

"How much money has she put into the lot?" a member asked.

"I dont know," the neighbour said.

"Don't you think it is rather dangerous," the member continued, "to go about telling that anybody owns a lot or any other property when, as a matter of fact, you don't know anything about it? And you have admitted that all you know about this case is something you have heard, haven't you?"

"Well yes," the neighbour admitted.

"Then we recommend," the board member said, "that you go home and refrain from saying anything directly or indirectly about anybody connected with the draft, unless you have positive information to which you can swear."

Too Yellow to Serve.

A young man well known in the vicinity of the Court house and City hall was caught in the draft and pronounced physically fit. He has since been endeavouring to move all the powers that be of which he has knowledge in order to be exempted.

"You ought to be able to get a good job at Sea Breeze," remarked a blunt-spoken woman with whom he is acquainted.

"Doing what?" he asked, expecting a compliment.

"Colouring the skins of lemons," she answered, and now they don't speak.

Will Be Among First.

Frank J. Miller, who lives at 13 Erath street, appeared before the Fourth district board to-day and said that he had just returned from his vacation.

"I have read in the newspapers," he said, "that only 5 per cent. of those drafted are to be sent forward on September 5th. If it can possibly be done, will you please include me in the 5 per cent?"

Both William F. Durnan, chairman, and Norbert J. Streb, the only members of the board now on duty, congratulated Mr. Miller upon his patriotism and assured him that his wish would be granted.

Modest of His Good Deeds.

He was accompanied by his wife when he appeared before the Fourth district board to support his claim for exemption on the ground that he was married and that his wife was absolutely dependent. He said that he had a business, small, perhaps, but paying enough to support himself and wife in comfort, and that as he was also the manager of the business the entire structure he had succeeded in building up in ten years would fall to the ground. What he said was impressive and it was said in an impressive way, and his wife had heard it. The man was excused and the examination of the wife was begun.

"I want to say that my husband has not told the whole story," she remarked. "He not only supports me but he also supports my mother and his own mother, and if he should be required to go we would all become public charges."

"And he's the first man," said William F. Durnan, chairman of the Fourth district board, "who, when asking for exemption, has not voluntarily told of all the good he was doing in the world. Of course we exempted him, as soon as we had established the truth of what the wife had said."

With Canadians.

Walter G. Coward, 714 Lake Avenue, registered in this city and on July 10th enlisted in Squadron C, Canadian Mounted Rifles Overseas, and is now with the regiment at Hamilton, Ont. Replying to the notice to appear for physical examination he informed the local board of the circumstances and the matter has been taken up with Albany. It is possible that the man will be transferred by the Canadian government to the Rochester board, to be included in the contingent from this city.

New York Decisions.

New York, Aug. 31.—One man claimed exemption before two of the District Board Committees, using serial number 1,100 with one board, and 1,401 with the other, in both appeals he swore that he is a felon, and in one of them he had recently finished a two and one-half year's term in a State penitentiary. It was decided to deny the man's claim and leave his disposition to the regular army authorities.

John Irving, Jr., was exempted for six months because he is a farmer and has one crop about ready to harvest and is soon to put another in the ground. Charles Royal Dancer asked exemption because he cooks for Julius Kruttschnitt, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Southern Pacific Railway. It took ten seconds to send Dancer to the National Army.

Martin Kolesa, passed by Board 89, sought exemption on the ground that 'under no circumstances' would he fight against Germany. He also said he should be exempted as the sole support of a wife whom he married on July 5 last. The appeal was denied and the future will show whether he meant what he said about not fighting Germany. Charles Edward O'Rourke, who was examined in New Hampshire, with the consent of the New York authorities, was certified by the New Hampshire board as fit for service. O'Rourke stated that he is suffering from an internal affliction. He is a graduate of Cornell, and his family physician sustained him. It was shown that Mr. O'Rourke had no desire to evade service and he was given an exemption of three months, during which he will try to regain his health.

E. A. Morgan, Board 62, was exempted for six months because he is an inspector of hand grenades and rifles which are being manufactured for the army. Anthony Cortes, an inspector of ordnance, employed by a firm which is making 3,000 field artillery guns for the army, was also exempted for six months, as was also Charles H. Williams, a sailor on one of the United States Army transports.

MAY HOLD UP MARRIAGES.

Demand for Wedding Rings Causes Jewelry Strike in Chicago.

Demands by prospective bridegrooms for hurry-up orders of wedding rings are said by manufacturing jewelers here to be the cause of a strike among six hundred jewelry workers in Chicago. Forty-three concerns are affected, according to J. Milhenning, of the manufacturers' organization, who says the men have refused to work overtime at any price. The strikers are said to demand higher wages and better working conditions.

DEVELOPMENTS IN PLOT TO DESTROY MONTREAL RESIDENCE

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Sept. 4.—Developments in the attempt to destroy the summer home of Lord Athelstan are liable to be aired in the House of Commons. French-Canadian Liberal members are contemplating bringing the question upon a motion to go into supply. They recall that Elie Lalumiere, the first of the conspirators to be caught and who has since turned king's evidence against his co-conspirators was the same Elie Lalumiere who in 1913 was implicated in an alleged impersonation scheme on behalf of Hon. Louis Coderre when the latter stood for re-election in the constituency of Hochelaga after his appointment as Secretary of State. Affidavits read at that time in the House testified that Lalumiere and a number of associates were promised positions under the government service by Mr. Coderre and that they each received one hundred dollars for their efficient service at the polls. In connection with Leduc who suicided last night and Monette who is still at large in the woods, it is pointed out that these men are ticket of leave men. Tickets of leave are only issued on the authority of the Minister of Justice and as a rule only to first offenders. Judging by the manner in which these men "enjoyed" their days of liberty, namely by the commission of murder, rapine, and rape they must have been men of pronounced criminal tendencies when they were let out. The Minister of Justice will likely be called upon to explain upon what ground such dangerous characters were permitted to roam at large.

Concert And Banquet At S. A. Temple

One of the most enjoyable days the Salvation Army have ever had was held at Nicholls Oval yesterday, about 500 taking part. Races, refreshments and games all went to make the day enjoyable. The old folks from the Protestant Home, the children from the Shelter, all enjoyed themselves immensely. A march from the Oval to the Temple was much enjoyed by the children. The banquet and the concert were both successful indeed.

Brigadier and Mrs. Morehen were warmly welcomed. They will conduct a special united meeting to-night at Byersville.

WIFE ACCUSES BALL PLAYER.

New York, September 4.--Lawrence R. Cheney, who is more popularly known as "Larry" Cheney, one of the star pitchers of the Brooklyn Baseball Club, was placed under arrest on a warrant signed by the Governor of Florida, charging him with abandonment. Cheney was taken to the Adams street police court where Detective Downy made a formal complaint that he was a fugitive from justice. Magistrate Walsh held the ball player without bail for thirty days to await the arrival of police officers from Florida.

Counsel for Cheney appeared before Justice Aspinall and sued out a writ of habeas corpus, alleging that there was no ground for the charge, and he was released on $1500 bail. The writ is returnable on Tuesday. Counsel for Cheney said that the arrest was the result of controversy over the payment of alimony to Cheney's former wife, Mrs. Edna E. Cheney.

MARRIED!

When a girl marries and enters into a strange environment she is confronted with a trying task. The experience of Marjorie Wilde is so comprehensively described by Theeodore Dreiser in "Married" in September Cosmopolitan that every reader will appreciate it with sympathetic understanding.

This is Mr. Dreiser's first appearance in Cosmopolitan, and he has given it his best work.

The story is profusely illustrated by Howard Chandler Christy

"Battalion Of Death" Threw Back German Assaults On The Riga

"Exceptional Valor" Credited to Several Russian Units including Russia's Fighting Women—Russians Are Retiring in Perfect Order on Riga Front.

LINES WILL BE SHORTENED

(Special to The Toronto Star and Peterborough Examiner.)

PETROGRAD, September 5.—How the "Battalion of Death" (Russia's fighting women), threw back the German assaults over a front of a fifth of a mile out of Riga and inspired their comrades to hold firm against further advances, was told in front despatches received to-day.

The battalion of death made its heroic stand at a critical moment in the battle when the pursuing German forces had advanced to the point where they seriously menaced the line. It resisted the shock of enemy assault and then drove the Germans back.

"Exceptional valor" was credited to this battalion of death and other Russian units to-day in semi-official despatches. At several points their bayonets stood firm and hacked the assaulting waves to pieces. All efforts of the Russian command to-day were directed toward the possibility of extricating the Russian troops in the trap northwest of Riga in which they were forced by the evacuation of that city and the subsequent rapid German pursuit. "Our lines will be considerably shortened by the evacuation," said semi-official front despatches to-day, expressing optimism over the situation," and there is no danger of the army's encirclement. We are retiring in perfect order in conformity with a pre-arranged plan.

TORONTO CATTLE MARKET HAD DRAGGY TONE

Prices Were Irregular —Sheep and Lambs Strong—Common Stuff Low

Union Stock Yards—Receipts, September 4th, 36 cars, with 568 cattle, 82 calves, 366 hogs, and 650 sheep.

There was a draggy tone to the live stock market on Tuesday, owing largely to the overplentiful supply of common stock.

Mondal's exceptionally heavy run included some very choice cattle, and these were snapped up at prices ranging over $11 and up to $12.40. The slow gait of Tuesday's trading was helped along somewhat by the steady and strong buying on the previous day's market, as was seen in the sheep and lamb sections, where prices were steady with those of yesterday: Lambs sold up to $15.50 and calves to $11, but these prices were paid only for very choice stock.

Good cattle also held steady. There were no choice offerings. Heifers were strong in spots, some selling up to $12.15. Medium and [illegible] were easier, about 15c. owing to the comparatively slow demand.

Hogs were unsettled. The buying for the larger packing houses offered $17.50 per hundred weight for the animals, fed and watered, but by noon sales had been made. Some of the small private buyers who were anxious to secure a few heads of the stock paid up to $17.75 for the pick of the market. In no sense, however, did they influence the bidding of the larger buyers. Wednesday is usually hog day at the local cattle market, which perhaps accounts for the indifference of buyers in bidding against each other for to-day's light run.

There was only one standard of value, the base of $2.20 a bushel for No. 1 northern grade. Consignees in receipt of wheat merely had to send their commodity into store at a warehouse, and on turning the receipt over to a representative of the Food Administrators were given a check for cash in full payment.

War Came In Time To Save United States Says Mr. Elihu Root

Prussian Heel Was Aimed This Way, He Tells Lawyers at Saratoga -Two Opposed Ideas at Death Grapple—Elements Behind the Struggle Outlined in An Address to the American Bar.

THE RUSSIAN ARMY

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y., Sept. 5.—That Germany would have had her heel in America's neck at the present time if the United States had not entered the war when it did was the declaration of Elihu Root at the opening session of the annual meeting of the American Bar Association. He further declared there could be no talk of peace and security of democracy with Germany in her present position and that the entrance of the United States into the war was the one chance for the preservation of the American system of government. In touching on the war situation Mr. Root said:

"Gradually as time has gone on and facts have developed more clearly it has become perfectly plain that this war is not solely a conflict between specific ambition, but that it is a conflict between two opposed and inevitably opposed systems of government, of policy, of politics, of human security. It has become perfectly evident that the war was brought on with a purpose to establish throughout the civilized world a military autocracy. It has become perfectly evident that more than a generation of careful intense preparation has been made for this very thing, and that the democracies of the world, loosely compact, rejoicing in peace and prosperity, in political freedom and individual liberty, were in great measure and differing degrees unprepared to meet the attack upon them. And slowly they have gathered to the support of the principle of their lives, the principle upon which they live, against the adverse attack on this principle, the domination of which means the death of democracy and the overthrow [illegible] struction of the system of individual liberty of which we are the high priests at the bar.

"So long as there exists a great and powerful military autocracy which has the purpose to secure domination by military force, so long will republics and democracies be at the mercy of that autocracy. They must do its will or they must enter upon a systematic preparation of military force and defence, which in itself must destroy democracy and must destroy individual liberty.

"We have entered upon the present great war that we may before it is too late, defend our future liberty and security against the domination of an overbearing and arrogant military autocracy. You cannot have free democracy and successful war at the same moment. The inevitable conclusion is that, if you have to live in the presence of a great and powerful military autocracy as your neighbour you cannot maintain your democracy. If you maintain your democracy you must kill autocracy. As well go to sleep with a burglar sitting in your front hall as to talk about the peace and security of a democracy with Germany still competent to pursue its career of domination.

Had Germanys Succeeded.

"If we had not gone into this war and Germany had succeeded and had come out with her power unbroken, and had applied to us what she did to Serbia and Belgium, what would Germany have been doing to us now? What would Germany have been doing to us during the last five months if she had not been held down in Europe. Why, her heel would have been upon our necks.

"So our entrance into the war has been the grasping at the chance for the preservation of our system of government, our right of American manhood to assert the rights of the individual in all places and against all power, the one chance to continue the free republic that our fathers handed down to us. And our vigorous successful prosecution of this war is the sole way in which we can make that chance successful.

"There is no room for argument as to whether we should or whether we should not. We are in the war and the stake for which we fight is the liberty, the independence and the justice of our American country, our American life, our American ideals."

That proper legal assistance should be rendered members of the profession who take part in the war was the sentiment of the association, reflected in a resolution providing legal assistance for lawyers entering the State or federal service and the local exemption boards; conferring the practice of lawyers entering into such service, giving gratuitous assistance in probating the estates of those who have died in service and assisting the State and federal authorities in all activities in connection with the war, including the furnishing of public speakers for the promotion of patriotism and patriotic endeavour.

The American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology passed a motion recommending that the Harrison drug act be amended so as to protect the user of drugs as well as the dispenser.

A motion was adopted advocating the admission of members to the Bar. The resolution recommends that State and local Bar associations endeavour to elevate the standards of the profession and make amore careful inquiry into the moral character of applicants for admission to the Bar.

Another motion adopted advocates the formation and efficient administration of legal aid societies for the legal relief of the worthy poor.

Assurances that the new democracy of Russia would stand and that the Russian army was going on to victory were given to-night by Mr. Boris Bahkmeteff, the Russian Ambassador to the United States, and Mr. Root, at a dinner given by the American Bar Association for the Russian envoy.

Mr. Bahkmeteff said the conditions in Russia had been grossly misrepresented. He said that the happenings had taken place in the army which had caused some misapprehension, but that it represented only one or two per cent of the army and that the rank and file of the Russian forces were still holding the 1,500 mile front and would continue to hold it until victory came.

"The Russian army is not crushed," the Ambassador said, "and is not going to be crushed. The programme is for a strong democratic government and a strong army, and this is personified best by General Kerensky. The Moscow government has done good. The new government is going to give attention to all questions. The new government is stronger and higher than it was two weeks ago and is nearer the ideals to which we are aiming."

New Drug Acts on Every Organ of Body

Makes Your Checks Rosy.

A pale face, sallow complexion, weak stomach, clogged liver, painful kidneys, catarrh affections, rheumatic pain, run-down and anemic conditions of the whole system are caused from an impure, thin and watery condition of the blood. All these organs of the body are directly dependant on the blood for their source of strength. It will be a great boon to all these thousands of weak, anaemic, nervous, run-down people to hear and learn about this new drug "Bemised Phosphorus with Iron." After each meal and at bedtime take from two to three of these tablets with a little water. You will note that you will get results after the first few doses the iron acts immediately upon the blood while the phosphorus goes direct to the spine, the center of the nervous system.

As soon as you get the blood purified and the nerves soothed, the stomach, liver and kidneys begin to do their work and in 8 to 10 days you will be 100 per cent. stronger. Your blood pressure will be increased, making your cheeks rosy and you once more have that vigorous, vivacious, keen, bright, alert feeling of boyhood days. The new drug is dispensed by F. C. Webber.

"It's confidence that does it."

DENY COAL SHORTAGE.

The London Dealers Claim Big Increase in Coal Stored Away.

London, August 31.—The local coal dealers deny that there is any danger of a coal famine here next fall. Figures shown by various dealers show that there was an increase of 1,291 tons shipped in last month over the corresponding month of last year. One dealer has so far this season distributed 80 per cent. more coal than on any previous occasion. All the local dealers seem to be getting their share and the expectation is that transportation this fall will be much improved. The soft coal situation is said to be about the same as the hard coal situation.

CHAPTER XX.

BEFORE THE STORM.

Before a midnight breaks in storm,
Ye know when wavering gusts inform
The greater tempest's path!
Till the loosed wind
Drive all from mind.
Except Distress, which, so will prophets cry,
O'ercame them, houseless, from the unhinting sky.
—Rudyard Kipling.

Comes a vapor from the margin,
blackening over heath and holt,
Cramming all the blast before it, in its breast a thunderbolt.
—Alfred Tennyson.

Up through the brooding silence Enid rode. The heaviness of an impending storm was upon her. It seemed as though even her horse breathed in more labored fashion than was natural. It was not long past seven o'clock. Below the valley lay in gloom; the great gorges, or gaps as they were called in this region, had a strange, almost a ghostly look. They were full of shadows and a purple gray light—if such a tint could be called light—lay on all things. No mist. What vapors there might be appeared to have been drawn up into the massed, cumulous thunder heads that piled the heavens with their coming menace.

A flock of birds wheeled sharply across her path. It looked as though they were flying low because they were cowering under an impending peril. So that was what it meant, Enid said to herself, "Swallows flying low!" Did the winged creatures really sense a tangible pressure above them, forcing them down, hampering yet goading their wings to this earth-bound, panic-stricken flight.

She pushed onward, upward. There was no wind. The air was dead and dull. What life there was she felt to be psychical, in abeyance, like an electric dynamo temporarily stilled. Her face was hot and wet, and she wiped it mechanically. So! She had been as spent as that? Her mount, too, was lathered, though she was too good a horsewoman to have forced him unduly.

Once, in a tunnel, she had had the sense of a bursting pressure on her ears and brain. Then it was physical. Now, she had much the same feeling, though it must of course, be largely mental, if not entirely so.

Her nerves were drawn tense, and light sounds like the stir of leaves or a pebble under her horse's hoof, rang through her head until the exaggerated persistence appertained to the impressions of high fever.

Startled more by her own strained condition than by anything else, she reined up and, breathing deeply, collected her thoughts.

It was very quiet here among the hills—so quiet, as has been stated, the lightest echoes sounded disproportionately. On one side of her, the left, was a sheer fall of mountainside that flanked the trail. Distances immeasurable lay before her that way. But they were distances that terrified. She who was singularly free from feminine attacks of vertigo, shivered, turned her head away, and looked for comfort to the closely overhanging rock ledges and pare pets on her right. At first the rising hill gave her panic a lull; it was so immensely solid, so settled! One could cling there forever, even if eternity itself yawned on the other side but a few feet away. Then flung back upon itself, her terror took a new form—rather an added one. If the vague deeps on the one side suggested the unfathomable, so the somber heights on the other proclaimed the unscalable. She felt herself an atom shivering between two implacable alternatives.

The fear was momentary, and escaping it she bent low over her horse's neck and urged him recklessly up the narrow trail. The clatter they made was frightening but for her salutary. When the mount had clambered into the summit of the Ridge, Enid had her nerves as thoroughly in hand as her reins.

Then it was that the first heavy throbs of thunder shook the whole range like the blows of Vulcan at his Forge.

Looking up, Enid saw that all at once the low sky had swooped down even closer. The Valley was black. Far under the piling clouds a dead-white ghostly glimmer showed to her the horizon lay—somewhere in West Virginia.... A voice spoke in the trees about her, the voice of the wind. It was a new tone to her; not the soft caroling of fierce tempests, nor the low wail of melancholy rains but a pertinacious, deadly undertone like the hushed tuning of an individual instrument of a great orchestra just before an immortal symphony is to begin.

A swift, short light-blue glare made her horse rear. But she quieted him.

She had dreamed she knew what lightning was before. But this was like the rending asunder of a merciful veil, showing suddenly the blaze of Hell or Heaven, she could not say which.

After it the thunder rolled, pulsed and died away among the hills. Again the wind wailed in semi-darkness — for what?

And her horse was trembling. She patted his neck, hardly knowing what she did. What was going to happen to them both?

Of the ridge, the sky seemed within touching distance, and dark blue. Panting, white and soaked with the cold sweat of a terror which she could not as yet analyze, she looked from the right to the left of her. On the Warm Sulphur Springs side, the view opened clear and sharp—the sharper apparently for the weird half light. On the left—on the far edge of the ripling lower ranges, was a blur. Mist? As yet she had seen no mist in the valleys. Yet the clouds seemed unaccountably merged into the earth in one broad patch. One broad patch—was it not widening—drawing nearer?

Fascinated, she stared at it. It was advancing like a square of vaporous curtain stuff blown strongly onward toward her. It had the look of a half-washed slate—lighter in tint than the cloud stuff above. And it was coming quickly, quickly! And it came, the curious low note in the trees about her grew faintly sharp, and shrill; a breeze, ice-cold and definite, as though from a hand touched her cheek. Up from the valleys on either side of her rose a great damp chilly breath....the blurred patch was coming closer. And as she stared, frightened and thrilled, she saw a shiver of white across the vast wooded mountainside on the other side of the Valley land on her right. The silver tremor made her pause and marvel until she realised what it was. Then with a gasp, she struck her horse sharply with her crop and darted headlong along the bleak Bridge Trail.

It was a great wind that bent the forests there beyond until they were silvered and tremulous beneath it: the big wind that heralds those moments when the elements rise laughing to assert themselves in the face of civilised power and control. The blur that, coming straight and relentless from the horizon, now seemed to blot out almost all the world, was rain—a cloud burst, probably.

CHAPTER XXI.

MEN.

They have looked each other between the eyes, and there they found no fault.
They have taken the Oath of the Brother-in-Blood....
—Rudyard Kipling.

Jack Radnor parted from his friend Ralph Denby at the door of his room and without being in the slightest degree conscious of the process, permitted himself to be helped into his evening coat.

Jack Radnor was as has been said before, a very primitive man at heart. To this fact he owed much of his charm, for there is no more delightful creature than the cave man with irreproachable manners. No one not born with the elemental fires in his make-up ever learns the true control of flame. Bloodless men and women of breeding and of the world are like dead pearls, perfect, but with neither sparkle nor great value; primative persons—also of breeding and of the world—are like those same pearls imbued with a living blaze that makes them prismatic, arresting beyond price.

Standing with every muscle rigid, as his man brushed imaginary dust from his coat, Radnor experienced two choking emotional desires—one to follow Enid and wrest the truth of her own feelings out of her, by violence if necessary, the other to find Martin Hale and kill him for having, even momentarily arrested her interest. But he made no outward demonstration and probably had never looked cooler nor handsomer in his life. Only as he stared at himself in the glass, he could could see a pinching pallor about his lips and a glitter in his eyes which were something of a self-revelation. "So that's what I am!" he reflected, unclenching his hands and feeling his palms wet and cold. "a brute beast, with just about the same feelings as a wild boar!"

"One Meatless Meal a Day" is a good food slogan for war time, or any time—better make it two meatless meals a day—it would mean health and strength for the nation. But be sure and get the right substitute for meat in a digestible form. Shredded Wheat Biscuit is the ideal substitute for meat. It is 100 per cent. whole wheat prepared in a digestible form. Two or three of these little loaves of baked whole wheat make a nourishing, satisfying meal at a cost of only a few cents. Delicious with milk or cream or fruits of any kind.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

My Decision

A Story of Romance Versus the Practical.

By ALAN HINSDALE

Of all the girls of our bunch I preferred Gwen Meriweather. Gwen had character stamped in her face as plainly as the word may be printed. But she was, or seemed to me to be, devoid of sentiment. I was full of it. I fell in love with her, and since she was devoid of what was born in me I endowed her with it. For this purpose I had plenty of imagination and succeeded in covering her with an ideality which she did not possess.

It is said, and I believe it, that opposites are readily attracted to each other. At any rate, Gwen and I paired off. It was not long before I was making love at high pressure. Gwen did not seem averse to listening to my rhapsodies, but she made no return in kind. Besides, she showed her matter-of-factness in other ways. For instance, I gave her a book rack, handsomely inlaid, one of those contrivances to put on a stand to hold a dozen or so choice books. Not long afterward her little brother knocked it off the stand and broke it. I told Gwen that I would have it mended for her. She said that it would cost more to mend it than it would be worth.

This reply was a great shock to me. I had supposed that the gift, coming from me, would be of inexpressible value to her. Gwen looking at it in a pecuniary way rather than prizing it as an expression of my tender feelings for her seemed to me to be barbarous. I made no complaint. I simply went off and nursed my wound.

When I entered seriously with Gwen into a discussion of a future together she again threw a damper on me. She poo-poohed my talk about love in a cottage—poverty she called it—and brought up many objections to a match between us. I was so inflated by my romance that nothing seemed to stand in the way of our union. I told her that with love in our hearts objections were of no moment whatever. Her reply was, "When poverty comes in at the door love flies out of the window."

This was all the more chilling to me because there were no important worldly reasons why Gwen and I should not be married. I was in receipt of an income on property to enable us to live comfortably. I had, besides, a good salary and was advancing as rapidly as was to be expected. I have noticed that women have a way of saying one thing and meaning another. Gwen's real objection to marrying me came out in good time. She saw plainly that I had set her upon a pedestal as an object of worship, and she feared that when the time came—as it inevitably must come—for taking down the gilded image and putting up one of flesh and blood my love would not prove to be of the kind to endure the change.

This was the way Gwen expressed it to me: "You have mistaken me," she said. "You consider me generous, unselfish. On the contrary, I am mean and never give anything away that I want myself. Besides, I have traits, inherited from my ancestors, that would turn any man from me whose love was of the most substantial kind."

I was a bit staggered by this confession, but not for long. My optimistic disposition rose above fear that I would not love Gwen even if she were all she painted herself, and I told her so in most impassioned words, at the same time lavishing upon her an abundance of caresses. But she disengaged herself from me, avowing that at the first sign of a real fault in her my caresses would turn to expressions of contempt.

One day when Gwen and I were walking together we came to a fruit stand kept by a poor woman who was evidently obliged to keep her little child with her while selling her goods. Gwen took a fancy to some apples and asked the woman their price. Instead of paying it Gwen endeavored to beat the vendor down and, failing to do so, walked on without buying. I was so filled with commiseration for a woman whose sphere in life condemned her to make her living in such an humble way, especially as she was obliged to keep a hungry looking child with her while doing so, that I would have been glad to pay double the price she asked for her apples.

I said nothing to Gwen about the matter then, but I thought a great deal. After all, was she not right in asserting that after we were married her faults would come up to make trouble between us? She had said that she was very mean and when a time came had not scrupled to show that meanness. While I was repelled at her fault, I could not but admire her frankness and her wisdom at hesitating to marry a man who was ignorant of it.

Gwen and I were invited to spend a couple of weeks in midsummer at the country residence of a friend of hers. Gwen and Miss Emily Tucker had been schoolmates, and I did not doubt that Miss Tucker possessed my fiancee's confidence to a far greater degree than I did, for if there are two persons in the world who are bent on withholding confidence from each other they are an engaged couple. I know perfectly well that Gwen gave her friend a list of my good and bad qualities and certain other information about me that she would not mention to me.

One evening I was sitting in the gloaming in the drawing room while the girls were upstairs in their rooms dressing for dinner. I heard a light step on the stairs, and a moment later Gwen entered the room where I was. I was sitting in a dark corner, and she apparently did not see me. There was a case of curios in the room, some of which were very rare and some very beautiful. Gwen went to this case and took from it a tiny statuette, for which she had expressed admiration. She concealed it in her drapery and a few minutes later passed out of the room.

Heaven preserve me! My fiancee was a thief—a thief who would steal from her bosom friend, who, at the time of the theft, was entertaining her. Never before or since have I experienced such a shock. Surely this was too much. I could bear with faults in a wife, but not with ingratitude and dishonesty. The only redeeming point about my fiancee's actions was that she hesitated to drag me down to her level. She shrank from marrying a man who adored her, he to find out what she was when it was too late.

With all my own faults, I am certainly conscientious. I mean by this if I do wrong I don't attempt to excuse myself. I deemed it my duty to inform my hostess that she was harboring a serpent in my fiancee. But I found it very difficult to do this. It involved my first informing Gwen that I had seen her steal. There was a remote possibility that she could explain her act, but I could not see how she could do so satisfactorily.

When dinner was announced I dreaded to go into the dining room. Pulling myself together, I did so. And that there was something on my mind was very apparent. There were others present besides the two girls, and all were dampened by my saying nothing and looking as if I had received a stab. When the dinner was over Gwen led me into the drawing room and, turning to me, said:

"Something troubles you. Tell me what it is."

I stammered an account of my being in the drawing room alone in the gloaming, of her entry and, supposing that she was unobserved, of my seeing her appropriate the statuette.

"It is well," she said, "that you have discovered a serious blemish in me before tying yourself up to me for life. My maternal grandmother was a kleptomaniac. Had she not been a lady she would have doubtless spent the most of her life in prison. Since she was a lady she was followed by a woman employed to return what she stole or pay the bills. I should have had the strength to tell you that I have inherited this mania, that you might cast me off. I can only say that I had not the moral strength to do so."

Here was a failing which, being inherited, Gwen was not responsible for. If she should become a confirmed invalid, loving her as I did I would not hesitate to marry her and devote my life to her care. Should I cast her off for this other physical defect, for which she was no more accountable than the other?

I walked away from her to another part of the room. This matter was of too much importance for me to decide on impulse. After pacing back and forth a few minutes I stopped before Gwen, who had sunk upon a sofa, and said to her:

"Gwen, give me till tomorrow to decide what course I shall take in this matter."

She made no reply, but left the room.

Later Emily Tucker came in and said to me:

"What has happened?"

"I can't tell you now. I must have till tomorrow morning."

She, too, retired, and again I was alone. Taking my hat and cane, I left the house that I might have the dome of heaven under which to think. I did not return till near midnight. Seeing a light in Gwen's room, I called to her softly. The window was open, and she heard me.

"I have decided," I said. "Come down and I will tell you."

She had not gone to bed and in a few minutes came down on to the porch, where I was, and, approaching, stopped a short distance from me.

"I love you so well that I can't give you up," I said. "In screening you from the consequences of your misfortune I shall be far happier than passing a lifetime without you."

I supposed that she would stand mute. I would approach her and take her in my arms; her head would drop on my breast in token that she accepted the sacrifice. What was my astonishment when she broke into a laugh. And I was still more surprised to hear it echoed from an upper window. I recognized the echo as Emily's.

"Stupid," Gwen said to me, "how could you have been deceived by such a shallow trick? My kleptomaniac grandmother was a minister's wife and inherited nothing but goodness. When I entered the drawing room this evening I knew you were there and took the statuette on purpose that you should see me. I carried it to Em and told her that I had given your romance a severe test. I am happy that you have stood it valiantly."

For the next two hours we relapsed into billing and cooing.

I am free to confess that Gwen's common sense and practicability have counted for far more than my romance. I have missed a certain companionship of appreciation in my wife, but one may enjoy ideality alone, while management is necessary for all parties concerned. Whenever I have talked "in the clouds" Gwen has taken me by the coattail and pulled me down to earth. When fits of generosity that we could not afford have seized upon me Gwen has locked up the family purse where I could not get at it. Every year that we have lived together has found us in better condition than the year before. Our prosperity is entirely due to my wife's management.

What Will I Look Like in Ten Years from Now?

What woman hasn't asked herself this question? How often have you worried about it? You have heard it said that "beauty is only skin deep". Don't believe it. The key to good looks is health, and the first essential to good health is to keep the digestive organs in perfect working order. For this purpose nothing is so helpful as Chamberlain's Tablets. The War Needs of Canada

THE NEED FOR GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF TRANSPORTATION

BY BENJAMIN ANTHORP GOULD

EIGHT

Transportation is the one essential upon which every effort of the country to render service in the war is absolutely dependent. It is the basis of all modern civilization, and is the one thing a failure of which would result in totally nullifying every other activity of the nation in the direction of service. This fact has been universally recognized by all countries at war, and the effective marshalling of the means of transportation has in every instance received the immediate attention of every government.

The greatest advantage which Germany had in the war was the preparation which had been made in adapting the German railways to war purposes. A network of strategic railways existed along both the western and eastern frontiers, and these two systems were connected by trunk lines across the country which has made possible the rapid transferring of units from one front to the other as occasion required, as well as the massing of units at any particular point on either front. It has been made evident that one of the chief reasons why Germany brought on the war in 1914, instead of waiting until a later date, was the desire to profit by the overwhelming transportation advantages existing on the eastern front, and to anticipate the completion of the system of strategetic railways about to be constructed in Russia along the Courland and Poland boundaries.

In Germany all the railways were government owned and operated. In France the railways were mostly government owned and operated, and those which still were actually under those which still were actually under government operation on account of the very close supervision and control maintained over them. The railways of England were privately owned and operated, like the railways on this continent, but at the outset of war the immediate need of government control and direction was recognized and steps were taken which in effect turned the railways over to the government. The current dividends were guaranteed to the shareholders, but the railroads at once were operated by the railway managers for government account and under government direction. The consequence was a remarkably quick and effective co-ordination of transportation effectiveness, with the result of incalculable benefit in permitting the resources of Great Britain to be mobilized for the war.

In the United States the progress toward government operation has not been as great, but nevertheless one of the chief things immediately put into effect upon entrance into the war was what was practically a railroad dictatorship. Mr. Willard, President of the B. & O., was given authority under which he has required from the railways that co-ordination and co-operation which is vital at times like these.

In Canada the railways have for many years been subject to the control of a railway commission, which has in doubtedly been of great value in preventing selfish exploitation of the public. I do not think, however, that this control is sufficient to meet the extraordinary requirements of these extraordinary times, and in my opinion there ought to have been at the beginning a long step taken toward nationalisation of the railways, certainly in operation if not in ownership. The fact that this was not at once done is no reason why it should not be done now.

Of the principal railway systems in Canada, only the C.P.R. is on a satisfactory financial basis. The Grand Trunk system has been struggling along from hand to mouth for many years, and the National Transcontinental system, intended to be operated in connection with the Grand Trunk and finally to be taken over by it, had to be acquired and operated by the government in order to protect the investment of Canadian public moneys in it. The C.N.R. is insolvent to-day in spite of the large subsidies given it by the government and by the provinces.

There is little question but what both the C.N.R. and the Grand Trunk systems must be nationalized in the immediate future, unless the C.P.R. is to be allowed to swallow them and to become such a railroad octopus as the world has never seen. To my mind it would be a great mistake if at the same time steps were not taken to nationalize the C.P.R. also. There is nothing to prevent taking the same action here as was taken in Great Britain, and requisitioning the road for government uses, at the same time guaranteeing payment of the current rate of dividends to all shareholders. The enormous subsidies both in cash the land grants which have been made to this railway at the expense of the people of Canada are an irrefutable argument against any accusation of injustice if such a course should be adopted. My own belief is that if this should be done the people of Canada would never allow the C.P.R. to revert to any such private ownership as at present exists.

There is practically no difference of opinion in the country in regard to the necessity of taking over the C.N.R. the only question which is being debated is as to whether the stock of that railway has any value and should be paid for by the government. This is a question of valuation rather than of policy, because everyone admits that Canada must not confiscate private property without compensation.

The opponents of railroad nationalisation maintain that it is impossible under public ownership to obtain any adequate efficiency of operation on account of the political patronage system which would be injected into it. Scandals in regard to the government Intercolonial Railway are usually quoted in support of this argument. It seems to me an almost unbelievable confession of weakness and partisanship on the part of Parliament to admit that it is incapable of creating a Railway Commission which shall operate the railway system of the country on a just and non-political basis, and I for one refuse to believe that it cannot be done. Whether this be so or not, there is, however, no question that in time of war the needs of co-ordinated transportation are so great that much greater control than is being at present exercised is required for the welfare of the country.

There is also the further danger that the political influence of such huge accumulations of capital as are controlled by the C.P.R. will be exercised for selfish ends to far greater damage to the country than could result from the dangers of political patronage under government operation. The charges openly made that the C.P.R. is backing Sir Wilfrid Laurier because it feels that any further devotion of the strength and resources of the country to the war would result in such financial weakening of the nation as to lead to decreased profits for the road cannot be dismissed as merely political scandal. No one who has any knowledge of the baneful effect in the history of the country of railroad lobbying can fail to be awake to at least the possibility of such a danger.

In addition to the railway question, I believe that the Canadian government ought to exercise direct control over the water transportation of the Great Lakes. The rates here have not, as I understand it, been controlled by any supervision other than the operation of the law of supply and demand. Last year the freight rate on a bushel of wheat through the lakes was about five cents. This year I am told it is at present about two and a half cents. Consequently the owners of lake tonnage have at times profited enormously at the expense of the Canadian consumer and of the Allied governments which have purchased Canadian grain. The selling value of lake ships has doubled and tripled, and, whether or no undue profits are at present being earned, they undoubtedly have been earned in the past. It seems clear that in dealing with the question of Canadian transportation the government should assume immediate authority over the system of inland water-borne freights.

Briefly, the whole trend of modern thought toward transportation is to hold that it ought not to be the subject of private business, but is one of the most important of public utilities. Certainly in time of war, when the services of these utilities become of paramount importance, nothing should be allowed to stand in the way of the most complete possible control, co-ordination and direction by the government of every transportation facility.

THE CORK OAK TREE.

There Is Nothing "Just as Good" as Its Bark Product.

When a man goes into a hardware store for a supply of cork for some specific purpose he generally gets what he asks for. The reason why the dealer does not endeavor to persuade him to try something else "just as good" is because there is nothing else he could offer.

Cork is cheap, and for ages it has stood alone in its field of usefulness. It is tough and elastic, and its specific gravity is only 0.24. This, added to the fact that it is impervious to water, accounts for [illegible] in life preservers.

The cork [illegible], which grows principally in Spain, Portugal, Algeria and southern France, furnishes the supply. Only the outer bark of the tree is used for the commercial product. When the tree has attained a diameter of approximately five inches, which usually it does by the time it is twenty years old, the cork, as the first stripping of bark is called, is removed. This cork is so rough, coarse and dense that it has little commercial value. But its removal does not kill the tree. On the contrary, it seems to promote development.

The stripping is done in July and August, and great skill is necessary in order not to injure the tree. If it is injured at any place the growth there ceases, and the spot remains ever afterward scarred and uncovered.

MODERN WAR DISEASE.

Shell Shock and the Way It Hits and Affects Its Victims.

To the medical profession modern war has brought a new disease, known as shell shock or "shock shell," as the British war office officially calls it.

To understand its cause and action we must take our place in the trenches with a company on the first line. An attack is simmering and the constant preliminary bombardment of heavy and light artillery is on.

Shells, shrapnel, high explosives are rained on them and on the trench with its narrow communication to the supports in the rear until there is a constant din of tremendous explosions and the air is filled with noxious gas. Time has come to seek cover and the soldier ducks his steel helmeted head into his underground dugout, crowds down with his mates and waits for the storm to blow over. Hours pass, days pass, some preliminary bombardments lasting four or five days, and food, water, patience and nerves are exhausted by the awful din, the noisome air and the crowded quarters with the sickening sights of nearby men disemboweled or otherwise wounded unto death.

Then it is that minds go awry. Shell shock attacks the veterans as well as the recruits. The poor lads with neurasthenic tendencies, with poor nervous reserve or with histories of sapping excesses and habits, begin to experience an ever growing fear. Their limbs start to tremble, their hearing becomes affected, they cannot talk or see, and when they can be rescued in a lull they have become jibbering or silent, trembling human animals, almost literally scared to death.

Scientifically, the disease may be divided into two classes. One is the pseudo shell shock following the course outlined in men of unstable nervous equilibrium, deprived of food and made to fear for their lives; and the second class is true shell shock occurring in men who really sustain blows of falling sand bags and planks or are buried in the upheaval of earth following shell explosion. Unfortunately the false division comprises over 95 per cent of the total number reported, and they offer the poorest hope of recovery of the proper martial spirit which the soldier should have. The true cases generally recover within a fortnight. They may, however, slip on then into the pseudo class and become unfit for active military duty.

NAVAL WARFARE.

Work of a Warship's Surgeons While a Battle Was Raging.

Many stories have been told of the part the warship plays in sea fighting, but it remained for two surgeons attached to the British warship Lion during the engagement off Jutland to describe the relief work carried on amid smoke and flames. Briefly, their account follows:

The medical staff, working continuously from 9:45 o'clock in the morning of one day until 12:15 in the afternoon of the next, made the mess deck a stretcher room, where parts of it became dressing stations automatically. Throughout the ship ventilating fans were run while the battle raged to carry away the smoke and fumes and bring in fresh air for the wounded, except during the heaviest fighting. Respirators of gauze and waste were provided by the surgeons when the smoke became too thick for the gunners, and not a case of one overcome by gas fumes was reported.

Nearly all the casualties occurred in the first half hour. During the lulls the wounded were carried from the turrets and isolated compartments where they had fallen. Morphia in two-third grain doses was given hypodermically to all, instantly relieving pain and checking hemorrhage. General burns, due to cordite fire, were severe and often fatal. Almost 50 per cent of the wounded, however, suffered burns on the hands and face alone, resulting from flashes from high explosives in confined space, which were so momentary that the clothing protected the rest of the body, and the eyes, closing involuntarily, escaped injury. Picric acid dressing was found to be a satisfactory first aid application in these cases. —Kansas City Star

Now She Hates Her.

Now she hates one of her oldest friends. Yesterday she was downtown with this friend, and just before noon she said to the other lady, "Well, I am going over here and catch my car." Then the other said to her: "Well, I am going home, too; I'll go over on Main and catch mine. I am awfully glad I ran across you, and I want you to come to see me real soon." Martha said she would, and the two parted. A few minutes later Martha went into a place to get a bite of something to eat, and what do you think? Yes, there she was—eating lunch. "I didn't want her to ask me to go to lunch with her," Martha explained to us after she returned from town, "but I don't see why she wanted to slip away. I don't see why she wanted to pretend that she was going home. I am sure I am able to buy my own lunch, but I want her to return those patterns she borrowed, and I never expect to set foot in her house again."—Claude Callan in Fort Worth Star-Telegraph.

Leaves of the Eucalypts.

Eucalypts are evergreens which shed their bark, but not their leaves. But they are not shade trees. The leaves are placed in inclined rather than in horizontal position, and the passage of light is but little obstructed. For this reason smaller trees and bushes and grass grow underneath, and the woods in places assume the appearance of a jungle from which arise the towering shafts of trees. It is interesting to note that primitive types of eucalyptus as well as the young of more modern types have horizontal leaves, pointing to a time in the geologic past when the climate was more congenial and no precautions to conserve moisture need be taken.—National Geographic Magazine.

Monte San Gabriele Taken By The Italians

TWO AIR RAIDS IN LONDON DISTRICT

Cadorna's Forces Completely Hold Monte San Gabriele

Italians Have Captured Whole of the Stronghold Taking 950 Prisoners, Including 32 Officers ---Now in Possession of All Prominent Heights Barring Way to Garizia---British and French Official Reports.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, September 5.—A despatch received in London confirms the capture by the Italians of Monte San Gabriele together with 950 prisoners, including 32 officers. The Italians now possess the entire chain of mountains which dominate Gorizia.

PARIS, September 5.—German attacks on the Aisne and Champagne fronts last night were repulsed by the French, says to-day's official statement. The French made a successful attack in the Champagne. French hospitals were again bombarded by German aviators.

(By Stewart Lyon, Special Correspondent of the Canadian Press.)

CANADIAN HEADQUARTERS, September 4. — North of Lens a most successful minor operation was carried out early this morning, which resulted in the penetration of the enemy's line and communication trenches on a front of about 600 yards, the establishing of a new outpost line well in advance of those formerly occupied, and the killing and wounding of many of the enemy. A number of prisoners were taken belonging to the Second Guard Reserve Regiment. The result of the operation, which was carried out by men of Manitobe and Alberta battalions, with little loss, is that in the region due north of Lens our outpost line has been advanced some 250 yards nearer the city than before, and is in a more favourable position for observation.

While this operation was in progress another party of our men advanced eastward for a considerable distance along the enemy's communication trenches on the north of Lens.

Hostile activity by our artillery in the Lens sector has [illegible] to straighten their battered defences and use shell holes instead. Several large explosions occurred in Lens last night and this morning.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, September 5.—General Gurke, former commander on the southwestern front, charged with treasonable conduct toward the revolution, will be exiled from Russia.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, September 5.—A hostile raiding party was driven off by the fire of rifles and machine guns last night in the vicinity of Armentieres, says to-day's official statement. A raid by the enemy at a later hour against positions held by Portuguese also was unsuccessful. The German artillery was activa in the neighbourhood of Lens.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, September 5.—The recapture at sea of six escaped Germans is announced by the Admiralty. The statement follows: "British light forces while patroling the North Sea on September 1 captured a small boat containing six German prisoners who had escaped from this country."

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, September 5.—Russians continuing their retreat along the coast of the Gulf of Riga toward the northeast have crossed the Livenian River Aa, the War Office announces. Russian forces operating in an easterly direction from Riga have retired to Sagevold, Lemburg and Detshubrayd. The announcement states that the hostile ships which have been shelling the Riga coast were submarines.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, September 5.—A Bulgarian official statement received here to-day claims that the French on the Macedonian front were repulsed on Monday near Bratonel with very heavy and sanguinary losses. It also asserts that on Dobrepolje the Serbians delivered an attack which ended in a sanguinary defeat for them.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

BERLIN, September 5.—Duenamuendo, on the Riga front which was evacuated yesterday by the Russians, has been captured by German forces, the War Office announced to-day.

Duenamuendo lies at the mouth of the Dvina, northwest of Riga. The heavy coast guns there fell undamaged into the hands of the Germans.

The Shoe Factory By-law And Industrial Interests Of The City

The by-law to grant a fixed assessment to a proposed extensive shoe manufacturing establishment, to be voted on to-morrow, should be regarded by the ratepayers in the light of how the interests of the city are involved.

It should be remembered that if a greater Peterborough is to be realized, more manufacturing industries will be the chief factor.

We shall move forward with new industries, and without them we shall stand still, if not retrograde, in the swift race of progress.

The proposed new industry is virtually a new one, and will be a large employer of labour and, manufacturing for Dominion wide trade, its products will call attention to Peterborough as an industrial centre and advertise the city every time a Peterborough boot or shoe is sold.

In the reconstruction that will follow the war, there will be, doubtless, a scramble for new industries and if we can secure one before that, that will be so much gained.

The chief reason that should attract a friendly attitude towards the by-law is the importance of Peterborough showing a sympathetic and friendly attitude towards our industries and to new industries—an attitude that will show that we practically welcome them and appreciate them.

This attitude will be a valuable asset in our equipment for attracting new industries. We shall get a good name for fair and liberal treatment of industries.

Every new industry means an addition to our population, a new pay roll and a new source of money circulation and distribution, something that will indirectly benefit everybody, so that everybody is interested in gaining new industries as the means of helping the growth and importance of the city.

The larger and the liberal view should influence the electors, when they go out to record their vote to-morrow.

NEW ANTI-AUSTRIAN CAMPAIGN IS NOW PLANNED BY ALLIES

United States May Declare War Against Austria and Assist In Downing Her and Thereby Force Germany Into Peace

READJUSTING THE MAP

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

(By Carl D. Groat.)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—To offset the menacing possibilties in the Russian situation and to force Germany into peace more rapidly, the Allies probably will soon undertake a new anti-Austrian campaign. Strong pressure is being exerted on this movement to declare war against Austria and then to aid in downing her so that Germany would be without her aid and cut off from Bulgaria and Turkey.

Meantime Allied diplomats are looking forward to post bellum territorial lines. This is how the Allies propose to readjust the European map according to the report here: The restoration of Belgium, Montenegro, Serbia and Roumania. France to have Alsace-Lorraine, a part of the German colonies and a French protectorate over Syria. England to retain most of the German colonies without paying for them and to control Mesopotamia and the Sinai Peninsula. Russia to control Marmentia under an autonomous form of government. Incidentally pressure is to be made upon Russia to make her demand possession of the Turkish capital or at least neutralization of the Dardanelles.

Germany to evacuate Russian Poland and the Baltic provinces, as well as Serbia, Belgium and Northern France. Italy to have Trieste, the Istrian Peninsula, the Dalmation Islands and the eastern coast of the Adriatic. Serbia to have Bosnia and Herzegovina and a Jugoslav State to be formed out of the Jugoslav provinces of Austria. The formation of a free Poland and a free Czecho Slav State and the liberation of the Arabs from Ottoman rule.

The foregoing has not been agreed to by the United States, who has indicated that she will not interfere in the settlement of questions purely European.

HARKNESS APPOINTED

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Sept. 5.—D. B. Harkness, General Secretary of the Special Service Board of Manitoba, has accepted the leadership of the Dominion campaign, which aims at the securing of legislation to prevent the destruction of food resources in manufactura of alcohol. Harkness will reside in Ottawa.

Gunner R. Smith, Canadian Artillery, Peterborough.

PTE. W. McMANUS.

Word has been received that Pte. Walter McManus, formerly of the 93rd Batt., and son of Mr. John McManus, of Smith Township, has been killed in action. Pte. McManus, who was well known in the district, went overseas with the 93rd Batt., and went to France with the first draft from Lt.-Colonel Johnston's unit. He was a nephew of Mr. Ed. Hickey, Charlotte street, and was 20 years of age. The news of his death will be a shock to a large circle of friends.

PTE G. W. MONGRAW.

Pte. George William Mongraw, who enlisted with B Squadron, 8th C.M.R., and went overseas with that unit, was accidentally wounded in the thigh on August 6th, and returned to regimental duty on August 27th, an official message states. Pte. Mongraw is a brother of Mrs. W. H. Bailey, 476 Bolivar street.

PTE. GEO. McGREGOR.

An official message from Ottawa states that Gunner George McGregor, who enlisted here with the 33rd Battery, in 1915, and went to England with that unit, afterwards being transferred to the 16th Battalion, was wounded on August 21st. Gunner McGregor's brother, Lance Corp. John McGregor, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, met death in France, some time ago. Gunner McGregor is a son of Mr. W. J. McGregor, and a brother of Mrs. D. Beavis, Mrs. J. H. Perrin, Mrs. A. E. Morrison and Mrs. T. Menzies, all of Peterboro.

Mrs. Marchand, 39 Lafayette avenue, received the following letters from her [illegible], and who enlisted in the 155th Battalion:

Seaford, July 26.

My Dear Wife,—Received your letters to-day which have been on the go since May, but they have found me at last after my ramble around the country. I am feeling a lot better after my operation. I hope you are enjoying the best of health. I have seen a few of the Peterborough boys who came over with the 93rd Battalion, and they are in the best of health. I don't think any of us are failing any. We get three hearty meals a day and eight hours' drill. But we need it all to get us in shape to meet Fritzie when we get to France, which I don't think will be long. A few of Canada's slackers will have a chance to come over now with the big C on their right arm. There's not many of the boys left out of the 155 Battalion. There's a few around here, but they have all been wounded and are ready to go back and do their bit.

MONTREAL, Sept. 4.—Lt.-Col. L. P. Blondin's French-Canadian Battalion, the 257th, is expected to reach a total strength of more than six hundred in a week or so, when several drafts are attached to it, as intended.

Big Fine For Farmer

SPALDING, Eng., Sept. 4.—George Thompson, a Lincolnshire farmer, was fined £5,500 sterling to-day for selling potatoes at above the maximum prices fixed by the Food Controller.

Thompson sold his potatoes at an average of £15 per ton, while the price fixed by the Food Controller was £11 10s. There were 55 charges against Thompson, to which he pleaded guilty, and he was fined £100 on each charge, in addition to £250 costs.

Thompson sold more than 1,000 tons of potatoes above the legal price.

Would Carry Conscription If Needed

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

TORONTO, Sept. 5.—"If the exigencies demand it, and the Imperial government makes an appeal for men, conscription would be carried in Australia to-morrow," declared Hon H. C. Hoyle, former Minister of Railways for New South Wales. Mr. Hoyle has come to Canada to represent the government of New South Wales in making inquiries into the railway situation in Canada. "Everything is subordinated to the war in Australia," he stated.

CHICAGO MAYOR HUNG IN EFFIGY

(Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner.)

CHICAGO, Sept. 5.—William Hale Thompson, Mayor of the "Sixth German city" was "lynched" last night.

The hanging—in effigy—took place at a downtown corner on Michigan avenue. A score of Spanish-American War veterans left the scare-crow dangling from a lamp post where it attracted a jeering crowd until the policeman cut it down twenty minutes later. As the policemen removed the effigy several automobiles bearing the "lynching party" rolled away, the veterans singing "We'll hang Bill Thompson to a sour apple tree."

Eleven Killed In An Air Raid On London

Two Attacks in the Metropolitan District Last Night - Sixty-two People Were Injured, It is Officially Announced.

THE RAIDER DROPPED

Canadian Press Despatch.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—It is announced officially that eleven persons were killed and sixty-two hurt in last night's air raid on London. One raiding aeroplane is reported to have been brought down off Sheerness.

The streets were filled with curious crowds until early hours to-day inspecting damage from last night's air raids over the London district. More bombs appear to have fallen in the streets than hit the buildings. The Chronicle estimates that eight or ten raiders visited London. There were two separate attacks over the London district, the second occurring about one o'clock this morning. Some people claim to have seen a half dozen airplanes, but they were quickly lost sight of in the haze. After dropping bombs the raiders flew seaward. One machine was located by searchlights at an estimated height of 9,000 feet. It was severely shelled and artillerists declare that it was hit. At the same time British airplanes were seen manoeuvring for an attack on the raiders.

Among the London crowds the dominant note and [illegible] which [illegible] on the raids on England. Others insist that the Government take immediate steps to obtain supremacy of the air to a degree which would render raids impossible. Referring to the Chatham raid on the previous night the Manchester Guardian says: "We have been invalided and have suffered greater losses of life and property than in any invasion since the Normans conquered England." Arguing that this is not inevitable the Guardian adds: "We can and must achieve an overwhelming supremacy in the air which would both open an easier victory for our army and redeem our shores from outlaws.

Two former members of the 93rd Battalion. Pte. T. J. Fitzgerald (on the left) recently reported wounded, and Pte. P. Bradamore.

A BIG CAMPAIGN TO PROVIDE HOME FOR WAR VETERANS

[illegible] of the Peterboro' Officers and Men Who Have Laid Down Their Lives in the Great War

THE G. W. V. A. MEETING

Immediately after the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition in which the War Veterans are to take a prominent part, a big campaign to provide permanent quarters for the Peterborough Branch of the Great War Veterans, as a memorial to the Peterborough officers and men who have fallen in the present war will be launched. The matter was discussed at the regular meeting of the War Veterans in the Barrie Building last night. Early in the summer a committee of ladies representing the different patriotic societies in the city, waited upon the War Veterans in regard to more suitable quarters, and it was decided to defer action until the vacation season was over. The Veterans feel that the time is now ripe for the campaign, and the ladies' committee will be communicated with to that effect.

It is probable that the Mayor will be asked to call a big mass meeting to introduce the subject to the public. The Peterborough Branch is increasing in leaps and bounds as each week brings more local men home from overseas. Twenty new members were admitted at last night's meeting, and the membership has grown to such an extent that the present rooms, although central and cosy, are hardly adequate to the demands made upon them.

The Model Trench.

Considerable of the preliminary work in connection with the model trench to be shown at the Exhibition has already been done, and from now on the Association expects every member who can assist to do so. A squad was at work at the Exhibition Grounds this afternoon, and a larger party will be on hand to-night. All members are requested to get to work and make this exhibit one of the big things at the fair.

Comrades P. Victor and S. Whatley were appointed to represent the War Veterans at meeting of the Peterborough Patriotic Fund, the latter having invited the G.W.V.A. to send representatives.

Several other matters of importance to the Veterans were discussed. It was decided to hold general meetings on the first and third Tuesdays of each month.

The Peterborough Red Cross Society and the Overseas Tobacco Fund will be invited to put collection boxes in the model trench so that visitors to the Exhibition who may wish to help these splendid societies will have an opportunity of doing so.

A Quebec Opinion Of This Province

(Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner.)

MONTREAL, Sept. 5.—"For a certain time common courtesy has been in abeyance in Ontario because its newspapers are obliged to exaggerate in order to make an impression on the perported elector. Quebec has none of these reproaches to make to the other provinces, which doubtless may differ from us on many things, but do so like gentlemen." So says La Presse in the course of an editorial. It continues: "We are not more fond of the Manitoba government than we are of that of Ontario, and we do not hesitate to tell them so. It is not so much a divergence of opinion upon the spirit and application of a law that may separate two provinces as the coarseness of language that ensues. In Ontario there is a competition for popularity at the expense of our honour and happiness. Orangeism which began this accursed game, seems to have made it necessary for both sides to carry it on. They take an evil pleasure in asking for the suppression of our political rights, in insisting on our elimination as they do on that of the negroes in the United States, in taking our opposition to conscription for cowardice, and in all and on every occasion looking on us as a people without initiative, without ideas, without the spirit of progress, and an obstacle to the progress of Confederation.

There are many things to watch in the work of saving food supplies. A lady recently arrived from the West states that by the use of leaky grain cars wheat that the world is calling for, is being strown along hundreds of miles of track in hundreds of bushels. Why are we called to stint in loaf and cake to save wheat for export when somebody's criminal carelessness is contributing to easily avoidable waste, ten times more than other means will save. There is other and special waste. Food Controller Hanna prescribes meatless days for beef and bacon, and permits the use of veal and lamb. Food Controller Hoover of the United States, tells an inquirer why lambs should not be slaughtered — because they are needed for wool. Calves should not be slaughtered because if spared they will become beef before the war is over, and will meet the demand that cannot be met if they are slaughtered now. Lambs and calves killed now to save a little beef if allowed to grow will become sheep and oxen. If the people are willing to forego meats, they will do without veal and lamb as well as bacon, in the interests of food saving for export. A sucking pig killed and cooked and served is an unthinkable thing these days; yet he will grow into hog no more profitably than a calf or lamb.

Isn't it soiling the ermine to employ judges as whitewashers?

PREPARING FOR THE FUTURE.

We know that there are unlimited areas of the most fertile lands under the sun awaiting the plough in the Canadian west. We are, however, not so sure of the people to take occupation of these. The west, which has responded most liberally to the recruiting call, is denuded of a large proportion of its effective manhood and this class has also been severely thinned in eastern Canada; and as the adult manhood of Europe is at war, there does not seem to be much prospect of a demand for lands for settlement.

But four or five hundred thousand Canadians taken from a population of eight millions leaves a good many for home occupation; and the Natural Resources Intelligence Branch of the Department of the Interior reports that on account of the impetus given to agriculture by the demand for increase of foodstuffs production, there is a marked increase of demand for information on the subject of homesteading. To meet this demand there has been issued a publication which should prove of considerable interest to the prospective settler in Western Canada. It is known as the "Homestead" Map and shows graphically the exact location of each quarter section which is still available for entry under the free Government offer of 160 acres.

Another inducement to settlement consists in the arrangement that farm labour performed in the west prior to application for a homestead, counts as residence on a homstead and shortens the period within which residence and settlement duties must be performed.

We don't want settlers to go from Eastern Canada at present—we want men to fill the ranks of fighters, to supplement the Canadian forces in France and we shall want others to keep up the ranks of labour; but we want the vast areas of our fertile west filled up; and divided desire and divided interest must not affect our interest to the growth of every section of the Dominion. It is Canada as a whole that must claim our fealty.

Are the Montreal rioters who mix their principles with looting any worse than many of the partisan war contracts profiteers?

FINALLY FINAL CONDITIONS.

We have peace proffers galore, with various conditions of settlement; we have various replies in various terms; but the terms laid down by Asquith of England two years ago for pith and pertinence and brevity still hold good. He declared:

> We shall never sheathe the sword until Belgium recovers in full measure all, and more than all, that she has sacrificed; until France is adequately secured against the menace of aggression, until the rights of the smaller nationalities of Europe are placed upon an unassailable foundation, and until the military domination of Prussia is wholly and finally destroyed.

With these conditions carried out as is still the determination of the Allies; all the rest is a matter of easily settled detail.

The Borden policy sowed the wind of nationalism and Canada is reaping the whirlwind, at Montreal.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER.

At the luncheon of the directors of the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto on Saturday, Sir George E. Foster was the speaker. Among other good and eloquent things, he said this:

> "We have the tremendous burden of war which no party in Canada is able to maintain efficiently. To do it efficiently requires the efforts of a united nation absolutely. I say Canada will fail in her duty unless its national spirit unites behind some organization whose sole duty it is to win the war."

Fine words these, full of fine truth. But is unfortunate that Sir George Foster and his colleagues in the government did not discover it sooner, or, if by chance, they had done so had not acted upon it.

Here we're in the thirty-eighth month of the war, and a senior member of the government, the most eloquent mouthpiece of the Ministers, announces, apparently as a new discovery, the most patent, and most obvious condition and principle of war winning as a new condition — something that should have been in operation for the past three years and one month.

We began well, when Parliament entered upon a party truce, and Liberals and Conservatives united as patriots and not partisans in voting unanimously for whatever supply was necessary to finance a vigorous prosecution of measures of war participation. But there the truce ended. Liberalism was welcomed in voting money, but was shut out from any form of participation in its expendiure, or of the responsibilities associated with it. They were only lookers-on at extravagant, wasteful end, in many ways, corrupt, expenditures; and when they protested, in the interests of common honesty, of common decency, in the interests of the country, and in the interests of the war, they were denounced as truce-breakers and disloyalists. Liberals and Conservatives enlisted and fought side by side, and it would have been thought that in support of Sir George's contention—"the efforts of a united nation absolutely" —the responsibility of the support and maintenance and equipment of these non-partizan soldiers in camp, in trench, in hospital, should have been shared by competent agencies independently of party considerations.

On the contrary, while Grit and Tory, as citizens, worked side by side, the official administration of the war was saturated by party. Party favourites were permitted to exploit the national resources to their personal profit, and at the expense of the country's interests; and appointment to positions of emolument and responsibility, calling for the best ability of the country — to support "the tremendous burden of a war which not party in Canada is able to maintain efficiently"—were filled almost exclusively by partizans of the government, and through all the ramifications of military service, party considerations were the dominant factor of its administration.

At the moment when the government, by whitewashing commissions, wasteful concessions to the demands of capitalists involving nations' responsibilities of hundreds of millions, and by other means is strengthening its grip on office, Sir George Foster, a member of the government, voices want of confidence in it—"I say, Canada will fail in its duty unless the national spirit unites behind some organization whose sole duty is to win the war;" and that "organization" in Sir George's meaning, as plain as words express, is not the present government.

A FORM OF PREPAREDNESS.

Hartford Courant: "I'm afraid I'm going to lose my temper when I make this speech," said Senator Sorghum.

"Deliberately?"

"Yes. Some of the remarks I want to make will never be excused unless it can be claimed they were said in the heat of debate."

DUTY OF CANADIAN PEOPLE TOWARD WINNING THE WAR

The duty of the people of Canada towards helping to bring the war to a successful termination was the keynote of an inspiring address by Sir George E. Foster at the Exhibition, who reminded his hearers that he spoke as a citizen and not as a Parliamentarian.

Referring to the presence of the distinguished Canadian officer, Major McDowell, Sir George said the Victoria Cross which he had won for heroism on the field of battle was indicative of that great and better service of men and sacrifice which has been the glory of the Canadians at the front, and which will always remain the pride of the people at home.

Let Canada Accept Full Share.

"The best way in which Canada can support the Empire is to do the share that falls to her," proceeded Sir George, "and one of the best incentives is to always keep in mind that she is not simply working and serving for herself, but as a part of the Empire, and keeping larger inspiration of the Empire in view. The world is passing through an experimental stage, in the way of building and reconstructing of communities, as a result of new conditions arising out of the war. In this connection, the success of the British Empire has been wonderful, so far as it has been carried on.

Cannot Go Back.

"Every advancement the country makes is so many hostages to the future of the British Empire, and as Canada makes a step forward she is obligated to make another step and maintain the advance. Canada never had to row before as she has to-day. The idea is not to sink or recede.

"Wouldn't it be most lamentable to see the reputation already made by Canada in her present stage of advancement blurred in the next year or so, and sink into insignificance because we at home had not assisted in furnishing the foundation to maintain the valour of Canada's three years' work in the war. The spirit of those who say, 'Oh, Canada has done enough,' should not prevail or be encouraged. If it were not for Canada's power at the front we might fade. That is a thing that will happen unless we speedily wake up.

Parties Should Work Together.

"'Eyes front' should be on every tongue and close to the heart of everyone in Canada. We should direct more strength to 'eyes front.' In this great Empire with its component parts the people must keep this fact in view. We have the tremendous burden of a war which no party in Canada is able to maintain efficiently. To do it efficiently requires the efforts of a united nation absolutely (Applause.)

"In Union There is Strength."

"I say Canada will fail in its duty unless its national spirit unites behind some organization whose sole duty it is to win this war. It rests absolutely with the people themselves. The people have not the slightest idea of the tremendous burden any organization assumes in an attempt to carry on work of this war. No section or faction of the country is equal to the successful carrying out of the work of this war.

"We need the whole country behind it. Can't the people get together and get a sense of what it is and force us to that conclusion? That is the way it impresses me, and I pray every day that the whole people of this country may take the burden of the war upon their shoulders and carry it through.

United Spirit Needed.

"There is another burden which in its way will probably be a greater one than the carrying on and conducting of the war. When peace comes we in Canada can never expect to again see the national ship sailing on the same keel and through the same waters as before the war. We will never drop back into the old grooves. We need not expect that. It is true of the whole world, which has been loosened up economically, with the result that all lines of enterprise and thought will drop back or proceed along different lines from those pursued heretofore.

Double Burdens Coming.

"Are we making ourselves workingmen, ready and skilful, and able to do the building which must be done in the reconstruction of Canada after the war is over? Old prejudices have melted away, distinctions have been knocked asunder, the women have taken a place they never before occupied— presto, change— and when the war ends you will go back to your new dens of action. The burdens of the years to come, as well as the burdens of this war, require united action, and I believe we are on the verge of having a greater united spirit than ever before existed.

Moderate Thought Needed.

"What we need in these days is the temperate and moderate spirit, temperately and moderately expressed. At this particular stage of our country's history we need temperate and moderate thought, reasonable action, irrespective of any race, any creed, and prejudice, or the preconceived opinions of any section of this country. (Hear, hear.)

"Above all, be sure that your action is based on what is constitutionally, morally and nationally right, and when that has been crystalized into the method of law, execute it and rely upon the nation's arm and the nation's heart to carry it through. (Cheers.)

To Spend $7000 On Improvements

A letter from the De Laval Company, Limited respecting the closing of a street on the north side of the Company's property through to the G.T.R. tracks was read at last night's meeting of the City Council. The matter will be dealt with at a later date. The street in question has never been opened up and its present width is forty-eight feet, whereas the law requires a sixty-six foot street. To secure the regulation width it would be necessary to encroach upon the property of the Company and such encroachment would interfere with the storage buildings of the Company. The Company propose to expend seven thousand dollars on the storehouse at that particular point and they want some assurance as to the permanence of such work. The members of the Council were asked to take the matter up and be prepared to deal with it at a later date.

Farmer Was Killed By A Runaway Team

ST. JACOBS, Ont., Sept. 5—Tobias Martin, a farmer aged about 60 years, residing three miles south-west of here, was this afternoon found dead in his field. He was out with two horses attached to a hay-rake. It is supposed the horses got unmanageable and ran away. Mr. Martin's neck was broken. He was also a Mennonite preacher.

SLAVE FROM AMERICA REVIEWED IN FRANCE

MARSEILLES, Aug. 27. — Eleven hundred young Slav volunteers just arrived from America, were reviewed on Saturday by General Drude and Admiral Allemand. The review was a brilliant spectacle, each company marching by a stand from which floated one or another of the Entente flags, while a dirigible circled overhead.

A Haunt of Legend and Romance

Digby Basin and Long Pier, Nova Scotia.

PARRSBORO Shore with its rock bound coast of lofty crags and high walled jagged islands washed by mighty tides, the scene of Indian legends and the struggles between the French and English, and the residence of a more modern race of hardy voyageurs, is a name little known to the tourist, but one that has an indefinable charm for him who has visited this nook of Nova Scotia.

This was the home of Glooscap, mighty god of the Micmacs. Here one finds the Five Islands, lofty and steep-sided islets in the Basin of Minas, pebbles dropped by the mighty Glooscap, so says the folk lore of the simple Redman. Attracted by their isolation, it is believed that Capt. Kidd, the infamous and successful pirate, buried here his treasure troves, and many are the deep yawning holes to be seen in these wild and eerie islands where the bold have braved the guardian spirits of the dead pirate chieftain to find out this gold and jewels, bathed in the blood of gentle women and brave men.

Spencers Island, the Indians tell you, was formed when Glooscap overturned his melting pot; and the smaller islands near by are not common islands—they are Glooscap's dogs, turned to stone as guardians of their master's melting pot. Many are the Indians still to be found here and they believe that some day the great spirit of Glooscap will return to them; and then his chosen people will again rule over the land.

And here is Partridge Island—like Sordly Blomidon opposite, rich in the beautiful amethyst—once the home of Kitpoosegunow, the mightiest fisherman of the Micmac legend-ary heroes. He it was who embarked in his bone stone canoe, harpooned the whale, tossed it into his craft as if it were a trout; and when he landed, he it was who split the leviathan of the deep with one blow of his great stone knife, tossed one half to Glooscap, and himself ate the other.

It was from the lofty cliffs of Partridge Island that a French warrior, pursued by the English, leaped to his death on the rocks hundreds of feet below. And later, it was here a blockhouse was placed when England feared the raids of Yankee privateers in the stirring days of 1812.

With such traditions, little wonder is it that here was developed a hardy sea faring folk. Sometimes the wife and her children accompanied the sea captain as he sailed his tiny schooner to the four quarters of the earth; but more often, he sailed away alone and for months the mother reared his children alone and superintended the farm.

Here one finds beautiful farms, thick forests, save for here and there a clearing where one can get a view, of the magnificent sweep of the Basin of Minas, of the islands of Blomidon, and of the shores ten miles across the sea of silver, shores dotted with orchards and the white roofs of the farm buildings.

Men who have travelled the world over have come to Nova Scotia and declared the scenery along the Basin of Minas the fairest of it all, have marvelled at the mighty surge of those wonderful tides with their unique rise and fall of sixty feet, and have spent their summers in its cool, invigorating climate. A comfortable steamboat service operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway connects St. John, New Brunswick, with this land of legends bold and noble mountains, and with the land of Evangeline.

Millbrook Bowlers Were Successful

MILLBROOK, Sept. 5.—Two rinks of Millbrook bowlers motored to Cobourg last week and took part in the big tournament. There were thirty-two rinks present and great enthusiasm was shown and some exciting plays were witnessed G. W. Sayles, sk., R. Stone, v. sk., N. F. Dunsford, 2nd, Cecil Turner lead, won six games out of eight and carried of the 2nd prizes in the Consolation, viz., four excellent fountain pens. The rink from Kingston with whom they played the final game, won the Gillespie trophy and four wrist watches. They were a tie at the close of the sixteenth end and Kingston won in the seventeenth end by one point. There were rinks from Belleville, Kingston, Peterborough, Port Hope, Oshawa, Bowmanville, Cobourg and Millbrook. Delaney's rink of Cobourg, won the Stratton cup, defeating Belleville in the final game. Dr. Lee, sk., C. Richard v. sk., H. B. Allan, 2nd. B. Richards, lead, were downed in the first game of the Primary and also the first game of the Consolation. They were up against two Cobourg rinks and perhaps that may account for their defeat, as the local clubs are used to their green. However, the Cobourg bowlers are all good sports and it was a pleasure to be with them at their first big tournament, which proved very successful. The ladies served a choice luncheon for the bowlers and they deserve the thanks of all for the excellent viands provided. Mr. Delaney intimated that two or three rinks of Cobourg bowlers may visit Millbrook on Thursday of this week for a friendly game.

We congratulate Mr. Sayles and his rink on their splendid success. They sure put up some brilliant playing, as they were up against as good bowlers as there are in the province. This is the second year that Millbrook has met with success. Last year at Port Hope, Russell and his rink carried off second in the Consolation and won four handsome casseroles. Next season should be Millbrook's turn to win the Stratton trophy. It can be done if our boys get down to business.

SOLDIERS AND POLITICIANS.

There must be moments when even the most highly seasoned politicians of Canada must have a feeling of humiliation and self-reproach as they think of the angry, bitter, vituperative political campaign which they have stirred up at a time when the whole world is admiring the heroic and amazingly successful work of the Canadian troops on the western front. — Buffalo Courier.

Seven Suspects Have Been Rounded Up At Montreal

Are Believed To Have Been Concerned in the Dynamiting of the Country Home of Lord Atholstan—Anti-Conscription Demonstration

MONTREAL, Sept. 5.—The Dominion Police, who have rounded up seven suspects in connection with the dynamiting of the country home of Lord Atholstan, and other demonstrations which have taken place here against conscription, are still searching for two more men badly wanted. These two men are believed to be the owners of the arsenal discovered on Chateaubriand street on Thursday, and the most desperate of the anti-conscriptionist anarchists here. The police are keeping quiet the names of the suspects under detention, but people on the street are busy suggesting names, as several noted anti-conscription orators are missing from their usual haunts.

Elie Lalumiere, upon whose behalf an application for a writ of habeas corpus was made which application was refused by Judge Monet yesterday morning, asked to be kept in the immigration headquarters here, instead of the police cells, though, since a warrant has been taken out for his arrest on a charge of attempted murder, he should be in the hands of the detectives.

Lalumiere appeared before Judge Lanctot in the Arraignment Court yesterday morning and pleaded not guilty to the charges laid against him. Bail was refused.

ROUND-UP BEGAN FIRDAY

Lord Atholstan's house was dynamited August 9. Six men in an automobile were seen driving away from the vicinity in the early hours of the morning. Lord Atholstan had received numerous letters threatening him with death on account of the conscription policy of his paper, The Montreal Star.

Two weeks ago Ed. Lalumiere, brother of Elie Lalumiere, head of the Constitutionalists, was arrested, charged with having in his possession a stolen automobile. Elie Lalumiere was arrested by the Dominion Police on Wednesday. The round-up of the dynamiters began Friday. On Thursday the police, with the aid of the military, surrounded and searched a house found to contain rifles, cartridges and dynamite.

The courthouse here yesterday morning was crowded from an early hour with anti-conscriptionist sympathizers with Elie Lalumiere, whose release on a writ of habeas corpus had been applied for, and, with A. Langevin and X Gouthier, two men arrested by the police in Friday night's abortive attempt at a demonstration against the military service act, for carrying concealed weapons.

In pursuance of the policy of crushing demonstrations of anti-conscriptionists in the streets the police have ordered that no banners dealing with the military service act shall be displayed in the parade on Labour Day.

At the Champ de Mars Friday night where about 500 young men gathered for an expected lively meeting, the police men did not stop the meeting but they began a systematic search for concealed weapons that had the effect of depressing the crowd which melted away as soon as permitted by the police to do so. In the meantime the police had made two arrests and picked up three loaded revolvers from the ground. The two arrested were Armand Langevin, aged twenty-one years, 314 Chausse street, and Xavier Gauthier, aged twenty-two, of 298 Delisle street.

The next gathering place of the antis was at the corner of Dorchester and Beaudry streets, but the police scattered the crowd here. Then some went to Mayor Meredick Martin's residence on Logan street and called loudly for His Worship to appear. Instead of the Mayor some member of his household put in an appearance with the information that the Mayor was in Ottawa. The young men then went, becoming noisier and noisier on the way, and seemingly bent on mischief, along Ontario street toward Maisonneuve.

RIOTING IN MAISONNEUVE

The police of Maisonneuve were not so successful with the "antis." A meeting was held at the Maisonneuve Market, the usual speeches being followed by the usual parade. During the parade the plate glass window of the Hochelaga Bank, at the corner of Ontario and Aylwin streets, was smashed and missiles caused some damage to the furniture.

On St. Catharine street east the rioters broke into the hardware store of P. Tetrault, 1641 St. Catharine street, and stole about $300 worth of bullets and cartridges. The mob then smashed the plate glass window of a barber shop, situated near by, and ransacked the shoe store of F. Lacroix, 1688 St. Catharine street east, robbing him of $50 worth of boots and shoes. The crowd then went farther east to the hardware store of A. Chauvin, situated at the corner of Iberville and St. Catharine streets, and made a hasty retreat with several hundred dollars' worth of guns and revolvers.

F. Forest, who keeps a grocery store at No. 1395 St. Catharine street east, suffered a loss of about $500 worth of intoxicating liquors.

After a meeting attended by about five hundred persons, at the corner of Boulevard Morgan and Adam street the crowd made a charge for the hardware store of Messrs. Dufault and Reis, and stole several revolvers and several hundred dollars' worth of cartridges.

After smashing the plate glass window of P. Bouchard, a butcher, of No. 1637 St. Catharine street east, the crowd took to their heels, and two young men were arrested. One of them, a mere boy, was said to have been found with a box of dynamite.

Before the antis finally gave up the contest for "free speech" they made a stand at St. Catharine and St. Denis streets, near Laval University, but the police used their clubs freely. Two or three times it was necessary to do this in order to keep the crowd dispersed, but it was an easy battle for the police. In lieu of public addresses, the anti's prepared a statement, which they handed the press representative. It was prepared by Robert Parsons, Anarchist, and it laid the blame for broken windows upon the police, because the latter had interfered with the rights of peaceful citizens in parading. "The stopping of the meetings," the statement says, "will make the people realise the danger of the coming slavery stronger than our voices could.

"We urge everyone not to interfere with anyone wishing to enlist to fight for a few dozen William Davies Companies, who are skinning the people in the name of patriotism as they have never dared to do it before. We will not stop anyone from becoming a soldier. But those that believe, like we do, that this is not a war for democracy or freedom, but just for profits, have the right to refuse to fight in such a war. We ask you to be ready the day the Government issues its proclamation for us to register as slaves (soldiers). We shall ignore the law and stay peacefully at home."

The workers of the city are asked, in the statement, to declare a general strike when the time comes that conscription is put into force.

Tit-Bits—Wonderful mastery you have over these savage animals," said the admiring visitor to the lion tamer. How do you manage it?

Ah, yes. But what is the right side of them?

Well, said the tamer, I reckon it's the outside.

Fourth Prize $10
Fifth Prize $5
6th Prize $4
7th Prize $3

THE EVENING EXAMINER is sold to the NEWSBOY AT ONE CENT a copy. He sells it for TWO CENTS. In this way he doubles his money by getting regular customers. He delivers it to them at ten cents a week, and makes FOUR CENTS A WEEK ON EACH CUSTOMER. There are quite a number of newsboys delivering THE EXAMINER to customers who make as high as $2.50 A WEEK, and all done after school, in addition to the profit that is made by selling the papers. The Examiner is giving NINETY-FIVE DOLLARS IN CASH PRIZES to the boys who secure the most customers for themselves between MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10TH AND NOVEMBER 1ST NEXT, JUST NINE WEEKS. It does not make any difference whether you have one customer or fifty customers on Monday next, it is the boys who get the greatest number of new customers that win the prizes. Supposing you did not have any customers when you started, and at the end of the contest you had fifteen, another boy had fifty when the contest started, and at the end he had sixty-four, this boy would have only got fourteen new customers. And the first boy would win the prize because he had fifteen new customers to take The Examiner while the other boy had only fourteen. CASH PRIZES will be given to the boys who secure the GREATEST NUMBER OF NEW CUSTOMERS FOR THEMSELVES AS FOLLOWS:

BOYS! Make up YOUR MINDS to Enter the Contest on MONDAY Next

It is easy to sell THE EXAMINER. It is the legitimate business of the newsboy to sell papers, and if you are polite in your canvassing for new customers all your friends and even strangers will be glad to help you.

It is fine experience for any boy or girl, and as there are quite a few girls who are now distributing THE EXAMINER they are ELIGIBLE TO ENTER THE CONTEST.

Mothers and fathers talk this matter over with your boys and girls. It is a good business training. There are hundreds of young men successful in business in the City and elsewhere who have at some time in their earlier days been Examiner newsboys.

SELL ONLY THE EXAMINER. Get your friends to try it for a few weeks and you will find they will be regular customers, and remember a gain of a few new customers each week may win you the $25.00 PRIZE. If there is anything you DO NOT UNDERSTAND drop into THE EXAMINER OFFICE this week and it will be explained to you.

The only condition is that Each Boy or Girl must buy their own Papers and no Prizes will be awarded to a boy who buys another boys papers and put them in as his own.

IN ADDITION THERE WILL BE A

OLD WEST WARD SCHOOL SUGGESTED AS APARTMENTS FOR SOLDIERS' FAMILIES

Ald. Dobbin, Secretary of the Patriotic Fund Waits Upon Board of Education in This Regard—Holiday For School Children For the Peterborough Industrial.

Alderman Dobbin waited upon the School Board last night with a request that the old West Ward School be fitted into four apartments, for soldiers' wives

Ald. Dobbin said that the housing situation in the city for the soldiers' families must be adjusted before the winter. The rent has increased about $5 a month in the smaller houses and some families are finding it difficult to secure homes at low prices. Some families have been sent to Lakefield where the rents are lower. The West Ward School could at a nominal cost of $1000 be fitted up into four apartments bringing in $10 a month rent which would in a couple of years pay for the temporary repairs.

Scarborough Bombarded By A Sub.

Canadian Press Despatch:

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Scarborough, on the English east coast, was bombarded last night by a hostile submarine, it was officially announced to-day. About half the shells in the thirty rounds fired from the undersea boat landed. Three persons were killed and five injured, but little property damage was caused.

HOME DEFENCE

The safeguarding of your home and all it means to you is not a matter of armies and ships alone. The comfort and happiness of your family are exposed to the attacks of enemies much nearer to them than the marauding Huns of Central Europe.

What will become of your home and your wife and your children, if you be suddenly stricken down as thousands of others have been?

Will there be any bulwark of defence to keep the home and the family from destruction?

You can most easily provide such a line of defence by means of a life assurance policy. Home Defence is its purpose and it fulfils that purpose as nothing else can.

JUDGE HUYCKE IS NOTIFIED

Will Name One Member of Each Exemption Tribunal in County

His Honour Judge Huycke has received instructions from the Deputy Minister of Justice in regard to the appointment of exemption tribunals for, Peterborough County, to assist in the carrying out of the Military Service Act. Judge Huycke is to appoint one member of each tribunal, the other member in each case to be appointed by the selection committee of the House of Commons. There will be two tribunals in the City of Peterborough, and a number at convenient points in the county. Judge Huycke is communicating with the Government to-day in regard to the matter. It will be some time yet before the personnel of the tribunals is announced. Although Judge Huycke is probably ready to name his appointments, the Parliamentary Selection Committee has not yet been chosen, and the tribunals cannot be completed until that step is carried out.

LONDON, September 5.—Admiralty reports to-day state that many more tons of bombs have been dropped on German military establishments in Belgium and much damage has been done.

Preparing For Enforcing The Service Act

Justice Duff Probable Choice as Central Appeal Court Judge

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

OTTAWA, Sept. 5.—"All nonsense," said Hon. Arthur Meighen to-day, when asked whether there was any ground for the Montreal contention that Mr. Justice Duff could not validly assent to the conscription bill because he was the Central Appeal Court Judge. As a matter of fact the official appointment has not yet been made, but it is known that Justice Duff is the man. As to this Meighen declined to talk.

Rapid progress is being made with preparation for the administration of the bill. The Ontario Registrar has not yet been definitely appointed, but it is understood that Lt.-Colonel Newburn will be given the position, while two National Service directors who have also been Conservative organizers will receive similar positions in the western province, namely, E. R. Chapman, K.C., of Winnipeg, for Manitoba, and E. L. Haining, of Saskatoon, for Saskatchewan. The appointment of Colonel Newburn will be an exception to the general rule that military men will have nothing to do with the administration of the Act. Militia authorities are now busy locating the points at which men will have to report for service. It is not anticipated that there will be as many of these as there will be of local tribunals.

The duty of the Registrar will be to allocate the appeals that are made in Ontario.

Appeals from the decisions of local tribunals will be forwarded to the Provincial Registrar, and he will say which appeal tribunal shall hear each one. The government has been showing signs of impatience over the slowness of the Liberals in choosing members of the Selective committee which will in turn choose one member of each tribunal. The government list of names has been ready for some time, but it was not thought desirable to divulge these until the Liberal names are also forthcoming. An authority said:

"If action is not soon taken in this regard the government will go ahead and make the Liberal appointments itself, as there is no intention of permitting longer delay than is absolutely necessary."

British Pacifist Gets Six Months

LONDON, Sept. 5.—E. D. Morel, secretary of the Union of Democratic Control, and one of the leaders of the pacifist movement, who was arrested on Friday last, charged with unlawfully inciting one, Ethel Sedgewick, to convey to Switzerland a pamphlet contrary to regulations, pleaded guilty in Bow Street Police Court to-day. He was sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

GERMANY'S EXPECTATIONS

Canadian Press Despatch.

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 5.—Capt. Von Knehl Welter, the naval expert of the Berlin Lokal Azeiger, writes that he expects the submarine sinkings during August to reach 750,000 tons.

MAKING AS MUCH PROGRESS AS POSSIBLE

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

OTTAWA, Sept. 5.— That the Commission appointed to inquire into the findings of W. F. O'Connor on Canadian cold storage plants is making as speedy progress as is possible under the circumstances, is the claim of Geo. F. Henderson, Chairman of the Commission in reply to complaints of delay. The Commission was appointed more than six weeks ago.

"We have made as much progress as it is physically possible to make," said Mr. Hendersen. "It is too soon yet to predict what the findings will be. After the books of the Davies Co. have been thoroughly examined, public sittings will be held. My opinion is that there is no use doing anything until the accountants have finished their work, otherwise we might be blazing wrong trails."

More Loans Are Made To Allies

Negotiations Are Off Says The Free Press

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 5.— The Free Press says to-day negotiations which have been proceeding for entrance into the Union Government at Ottawa of members of the Manitoba Government and members of the Saskatchewan Government, are definitely off. These gentlemen have declined for reasons which apparently are satisfactory to them.

The Free Press in recording the fact, "desires to place on record its unalterable conviction that patriotism requires that this country should be saved from the evils of party election and that it is the duty of Liberals to participate in Union Government and give all possible assistance in its formation."

LOCAL TRIBUNALS ARE BEING NAMED

Special to The Toronto Star and The Evening Examiner:

KITCHENER, Ont., Sept. 5.—Judge Hanning, acting on instructions from the Deputy Minister of Justice, has named ten local tribunals for Waterloo county in connection with the Military Service Act, their location being: Kitchener, two; Galt, two; Elmira, New Hamburg, Ayr, Linwood, Elmira and Waterloo each one. The Judges for these tribunals have not been named.

Sawyer, President of the St. Charles Athletic Club, and Pat McAvoy, another veteran athlete, will attempt to walk from Hamilton City Hall to West End Y.M.C.A., Toronto, 43 miles, in ten hours. CANADIAN CASUALTIES ARE HEAVY

Canadian Press Despatch.

OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 5.—Canadian casualties continue to pour into the Records Office here, echoing the gallant work by the Maple Leaf troops in recent battles. Since Saturday, August 25th there have been 7,347 Canadians in the list and a big proportion killed or seriously wounded. In the noon casualty list to-day fifty are given as killed or died of wounds, and forty-six gassed. It is notable that a great number of Canadians have been "gassed" lately.

AN INTERESTING DISPLAY WINDOW

Kingan Hardware Company's Effective Window Display

The display window of the Kingan Hardware Company is of special interest to duck hunters and sportsmen. One section of the window is very cleverly arranged to represent a hunting scene in which a minature hunter in sporting array and armed with a small calibre rifle plays a prominent part in the setting. A couple of live ducks swimming around in a swimming tank specially arranged for the purpose and aided by a liberal supply of evergreens complete a very effective window. The south half of the window is mainly devoted to a dislay of sporting goods for which the Company is noted.

A Showing of Fall Suits

Masterpieces of the Designers Art

Fashion has paid strict attention to the comfort of the wearer this season and designed snug cosy garments that are particularly inviting. She has not disregarded her own interests, however, but merely joined hands to foil the bleak winds and piercing cold.

At present we have an enviable range of Suits and Coats in all manner of designs and materials—you may think it is early but the proper time to purchase is now when stocks are at high tide and you get a full season's wear from your garment.

BURGUNDY with its deep richness has found much favor this season—and so we selected this model. But not for its color alone. It is resplendent with a dozen features. Most striking is the high waist line, then the black military braid on sleeves and back; and with everyone the shawl, convertible collar of black velvet will be immensely popular. The skirt is made unique with two pockets concealed behind a front panel; gathered and belted at top. Price $45.00

NAVY blue serge was never before used to better advantage than in this suit on the military order. It has a black velvet collar with embroidered gold bars, belts run around the waist in a peculiar arrangement; most striking of all is the military cape that gives it quite a martial air—it falls in the fashion of those worn by military nurses and is faced with cerise satin. This however is detachable as it buttons to each shoulder. Price $58.00.

JAVA brown and velour. Between the two there is quite a story but we can just give you a synopsis. The coat is 42 inches long, with a double breasted effect, made possible by two flaps that disappear and suddenly come out on the other side. The large collar of Hudson seal is an ample protection from the cold—it's most inviting. The skirt is gathered and belted at top. Price $67.50.

IF you were fitted with this suit the mirror would reveal a serge material in a deep Russian green shade, 38 in. coat and belt arrangement that is stunning, to say the least, the sleeves are garnished with a row of buttons, reaching almost to the elbow. The large convertible collar of black velvet provides a most suitable finish. The skirt is double belted and hangs full at the back. Price $40.00.

A KHAKI SUIT

A New and Wakening Patriotic Song By Mrs. A. Roger Collins

In the lecture froom of Knox Presbyterian church, about the end of September, the Bible class of Mrs. Roger will put on a sale in the interests of the Prisoners of War Fund.

Mrs. A. Roger Collins has undertaken to provide a programme to precede the sale—in itself an indication that it will be worth while. It will include a little burlesque play, and, as a special feature, a song and chorus—"A Khaki Suit," a patriotic song, words and music composed by Mrs. Roger Collins, and published at her own expense, as part of her "bit" in war work. The net proceeds from its sale are to be devoted to the Prisoners of War Fund.

Apart from the object of its composition, the song has very apposite lyrical and musical qualities. "Polly" has a lover "who was"—like many others—"brave' in time of peace," but whose courage, like that of Bob Acres, oozed out at his fingers' ends when the time for showing it came. She dons a "khaki suit" and raises a battalion, and the words close with a ringing appeal, and merge finely into the declaration of the chorus—"I'll be a recruit, and wear a khaki suit."

The music is lively and martial, with a fine swing that the chorus greatly accentuates and well fits the inspiring text of the song. Dr. Vogt of Toronto, says of the song, "It is very singable and should make a general appeal, both because of its text and the music."

The song will be sung at the sale in the Lecture Room of Knox Church, by Miss Waterman, who takes the solo, in "A Khaki Suit," and a chorus of about twenty, in uniform.

Sea Planes To Solve Mystery Of The Arctic

(Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner.)

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—Sea planes scudding over ice pinnacles at 150 miles an hour will ultimately solve the mysteries of the Arctic and Antarctic, Donald B. McMillan believes to-day. McMillan, head of the American Museum's Crockerland Expedition, has just returned from four years in the Arctic. He declared he believes the next big polar expedition will be made with airplanes. "They can cover more ground between breakfast and dinner than we can explore with dog sledges in 64 days," he declared.

The Chairman Is Designated Head Of Department

Doubt As to What Authority Ald. Weir Has in Connection With Board of Works Committee Expressed Last Evening

WILL REPORT BACK

At last night's meeting of the City Council it was moved that notice be given of the intention of the Council to construct a cement sidewalk, under Clause 9 of the Local Improvement Act, on the south side of Sutherland Place, west from Rogers street to the end of Sutherland Place.

Ald. Smith moved an amendment that the sidewalk referred to be changed to the north side of the street and that the sidewalk be four feet wide, instead of five feet. Ald. Duncan suggested that a walk be constructed on both sides of the street. The suggestion was favoured by Ald. Stratton and carried. A locust tree on the same street will also be removed.

OIL ON PARK STREET.

Referring to the oiling of Park street from the C.P.R. track to the De Laval Company's property, Ald Stratton characterized the work as a wilful waste of oil. "The street was in no shape to be oiled. They went down and slapped the oil on without first clearing the street," observed Ald. Stratton.

Mayor Duffus asked Ald. Weir, Chairman of the Board of Works, for an explanation. Ald. Weir said he had none to make as he was not in a position to get the information. The Chairman said that the Council at a previous meeting practically vested the control of such work in City Engineer Parsons. "You put me clean out of business," said Ald. Weir. This interpretation of the Council's action was denied. Ald. Weir intimated that it was difficult to obtain information from the engineering department. "I am not going to beg it," said the Chairman. Ald. Weir said the trouble originated with a piece of sewer work started some time ago. Subsequently the Council vested sole control of the matter in the City Engineer. "The action of the Council implied that I was meddling," said Ald. Weir Ald. Smith said the action of the City Council in connection with the incident referred too only applied to sewers being constructed on Princess, Prince and Park streets.

DETAIL WORK.

Ald. Duncan attempted to show that the intention of the Council was to relieve the Chairman of the Board of Works of a lot of minor detail work.

Ald. Stratton was of the opinion that the Chairman of the Board of Works should be consulted in all matters including street oiling, etc.

Ald. Smith said that the responsibility of completing the work should rest with the City Engineer.

City Engineer Parsons was asked by Ald. Stratton to explain why Park street was not rolled and levelled before the oil was applied. The City Engineer said that the street was rolled and levelled, but the street was freshly graded up and the condition referred to could not be avoided.

"Are you satisfied with any of the work?" enquired Ald. Stratton.

City Engineer Parson—"No." I am not satisfied with any of the work done this year. We have done the best we could under the circumstances. We have been right up against it for labour and materials."

Ald. Weir said he felt that he had been ignored as Chairman of the Board of Works. He believed that the action of the Council implied that his "meddling" was responsible for the sewer work, costing $1,600 a foot.

City Engineer Parsons said he would be quite willi g to meet the Chairman at any time. "I would like to see the members of the Council more regularly.

"How often have you been in the office during the past year," enquired the Engineer.

Ald. Stratton who admitted that he did not visit the Engineer's office frequently moved that the Chairman of the Board of Works and the City Engineer get together and enquire into the administration of the engineering department and report to the Council. The motion carried. Mayor Duffus was of the opinion that Ald. Weir should have full charge of the department and keep in touch with the situation each day.

Best Way To Help Russia Is To Beat Huns

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

(Wm. G. Sheppard, U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

PETROGRAD, Sept. 5.—"The best way for the United States to help save Russia is to help whip Germany as soon as possible," Breshko Bereskevskaia, "grandmother of the revolution," told the United Press to-day. With Russia's disintegration, she pointed out, Germany might secure food in this country, defy the Allies' blockade and prolong the war for years. German activities behind the lines are steadily increasing. It was learned that an extensive plot in Moscow to attempt a coup d' etat during the recent Congress there failed, due to the loyalty of the local Workmen's and Soldiers' conference to Kerensky. More proof of the German activities is seen in the increasing factory fires.

Didn't Close Her Eyes All Night

Mrs. Garside Says Tanlac Strengthened and Built Her Up Wonderfully

"When my husband saw how quickly Tanlac relieved me we got him a bottle, too, and it is doing him as much good as it did me," said Mrs. R. Garside of 392½ Richmond Street, London, whose husband is employed in the munition works of the Spray Motor Company, the other day.

"I had been in a dreadfully rundown condition for a year," she explained, "and my stomach was in a terrible condition. I had no appetite and what little I forced down soured on my stomach and filled me with gas and my heart would flutter like it would jump out of my body. I was subject to smothering spells that almost took my breath away and suffered agonies with a pain in the left side of my chest. My nerves were shattered so I would start with excitement at any sudden noise. I would roll and toss from side to side of my bed and many a time I wouldn't close my eyes all night, and when morning came I would be so tired and fagged out it was all I could do to get up and dress. I fell off eight pounds and was fast going down hill, in fact, I hadn't enough strength and energy left to do my housework.

"I think I took about every preparation there was on the market, but found no relief till I began with Tanlac. The way this medicine took hold of my troubles from the first and started me up hill again was wonderful. I am now on my fourth bottle and have the finest kind of appetite. I can eat most anything I want and since Tanlac has helped me to digest my food properly I have been freed of that awful gas and the smothering spells, and the heart flutterings have stopped. My nerves are in much better shape and I sleep better than I have in a long time. Tanlac has built me up so that I am heavier and stronger than I was and certainly feel more like doing my housework now than I did a few weeks ago."

Dog Quarantine Not To Be Raised For The Present

Another Case of Rabies Has Been Reported and the Council Defers Action—Fire Chief's Resignation Asked For

COUNCIL MEETING

A dog owned by Albert Watkins, 148 Park street which following a post mortem examination revealed a bad case of rabies was the means of frustrating the Council's intention of raising the dog quarantine. The Council met last evening and instead of raising the embargo on dogs as was first intended, decided to continue the present quarantine restrictions. It was reported to the Council prior to the meeting that a dog had been shot the evening previous and an examination made by Dr. Johnston veterinary surgeon, disclosed marked symptoms of rabies. The dog in question was destroyed by the owner.

Ald. Stratton suggested that the quarantine restrictions be modified so as to enable dogs to run at large providing they are properly muzzled. This the alderman remarked would enable the hounds to get into proper condition for the fall hunt. In view of the circumstances reported to the Council it was decided to let the present by-law remain in force for the present. "Cats should be kept on the leash," observed Ald. Stratton.

Fire Chief Howard.

It was moved by Ald. Duncan and seconded by Ald. Taylor, that Fire Chief Howard's services be dispensed with and that the city employ another fire chief. Both Ald. Dobbin and Ald. Stratton demanded an explanation which Ald. Duncan was not constrained to give. "Every member of the Council knows that he is a man we don't want," said the mover of the resolution.

Ald. Dobbin thought that the Chief should be communicated with and given an opportunity of replying to any accusation that might be offered.

"Don't you think it would be only British fair play to give the Chief an opportunity of defending himself?" inquired Ald. Weir.

"We should protect ourselves," observed Ald. Dobbin.

"That's what I am trying to do in this resolution," replied Ald. Duncan. "How often have we had the Chief on the carpet? I think he is putting it all over us. I believe he slipped out of town so he would not be here to-night," added Ald. Duncan.

Ald. Smith said he was not in a position to vote one way or the other. He preferred to continue his own private investigation into the matter.

The Council finally adopted an amendment, moved by Ald. Dobbin and seconded by Ald. Stratton, which in effect will give the Chief an opportunity of defending himself before a committee of the Whole Council.

Mayor Duffus inquired as to the method of procedure in securing evidence bearing on the accusation. Ald. Dobbin suggested that Mayor Duffus communicate Ald. Duncan's resolution to Chief Howard.

"A very pleasant task has been assigned to me," observed the Mayor.

Ald. Duncan said that the accusation involved both the moral conduct of the Chief as well as the Chief's administration of the Fire Department.

Russian Officers Charged the Enemy Soldiers Looked On

MOSCOW, Aug. 29.—At the third general sitting of the National conferetnce railway representatives, including M. Frolof of the Engineers' Alliance reported that there existed a state of utter disorganisation of transportation, which, unless improved, would cease completely by November. The representatives gave warning that the consequences would be terrible both at home and on the front, and that the army might turn on the country and commit unexampled excesses.

The extreme demands of the railway workers, the speakers said, played an important part in this disorganisation. They called on all those engaged in the transaport services to sacrifice personal interests for those of the country.

M. Gruesenberg, speaking as the representative of the Jews, said that they loved their country, notwithstanding their unprecedented persecution under the old regime, and had contributed greatly to the emancipation of the people and the defense against the enemy.

Representatives of Ukraine and of western or White Russia, said the people were ready to make any sacrifices for the good of the country. The spokesman for the Letts declared Courland would never belong to Germany. Delegates representing the Musuman alliance said all Musulman citizens of Russia fully supported the Provisional government.

Discipline Imperative.

Gen. Grousinoff, former military Governor of Moscow, told the delegates the chief problem was to save Russia from the enemy, and that to this end it was necessary to re-establish army discipline by eliminating politics, strengthening the authority of the leaders, limiting the power of soldiers' committees to economic functions and giving the commander in Chief opportunity to exercise unreserved authority.

Gen. Alexieff, former Commander in Chief, made a long address in which he recounted the history of the Russians' military setbacks and their causes.

He drew contrasts between the army of the old regime, poorly equipped with mechanical resources, but strong in warlike spirit, and the present army, well supplied with food and arms, but completely poisoned and enfeebled by ill-interpreted and ill-applied doctrines which have been put forward, notably in the famous order of the day No. 1. These doctrines, he declared, had split the army into two opposite camps, officers and soldiers, which have become almost irreconcilable.

Speaking of the committee's elected by the soldiers of the various units, Gen. Alexieff said they were useful to the army from an economic standpoint but were fatal to discipline of the troops. None the less subversive was the influence of government commissaries whose appointment he asserted, created an extremely dangerous quality of power.

No Respect for Leaders.

The General maintained that after publication by the government of the declaration of the right of soldiers, all respect toward leaders disappeared, the officers becoming veritable martyrs and having to pay very dearly for the offensive of August 1st and the subsequent retreat. The general cited some remarkable illustrations of this. On one occasion, he said when an attack was being launched, the force which advanced was made up of twenty-eight officers, twenty non-commissioned officers and two soldiers. All the others looked on coldly while these heroes perished.

The General declared it would be impossible to carry on the war to a victorious conclusion unless the strongest possible efforts were made by the Provisional Government and by the troops themselves to reanimate and regenerate the army.

MORE BRITISH VESSELS SUNK

(Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner.)

LONDON, Sept. 5.—The sinkings of British vessels by submarines for the past week have been slightly over those of the previous seven days, according to authoritative forecast of the official statement obtained to-day. Last week's official statement said 23 British ships had been sunk, 18 of more than 1,600 tons.

BATTLE STORIES FROM THE WESTERN FRONT

"I was down at Albert before the Somme show started," said a recent wounded soldier. "But the preparations made for that affair were never in it with what was going on before I left.

I honestly believe that our Headquarters Staff didn't care a buttom whether or not the Germans knew that an offensive was being prepared. In any case I don't see how it could have been hidden. All that was kept secret was the exact place where we were going to shove, and the time.

"We bombarded a very big stretch of front this time. Much larger than even the Arras advance, and much more heavily, or so it seemed to me. I should not be a bit surprised if the Boche positions to the right and left of our advance are just as badly battered as those we have taken.

"We must have wiped out the Germans in companies, judging by the effect of their own shellfire; for their artillery work simply could not be compared with ours. The sky seemed full of shells. Big ones too. You could hear them rolling through the air with that wobbly, rumbling sound which a barrel makes when it is sent hurling down a rough hill. The sound gives you a queer feeling every time you hear it, for you think that the shell is about spent and just ready to drop on you. Of course in reality it has still got a good distance to go.

"The Germans seemed to be using a lot of long range stuff on us. The shells went through the air with the swishing sound of a train drawing out of a station. I expect they have taken most of their guns as far away from the firing line as they could, to prevent them being captured. Anyhow not so much light stuff was coming over.

"They seemed to be trying to hold up our offensive as long as possible, for they tried to bombard all the villages round about where they thought troops would be billeted. They were also trying to damage the roads. Our pioneer battalion had a busy time of it, and they were always on the go mending some stretch or another. We've got plenty of roads made now, and it will take more guns than the Germans have to hold up our offensive that way.

"I'm sorry I've missed the push. I know the Ypres district well. I'll bet anything that if they bring up for this attack any of the boys who have been in the salient, the Germans will have a hotter handful than they know how to hold.

"I belong to one of the railway companies," said another man with a badly fractured leg. "This", he indicated his wound, "happened when the Boche started shelling us about the time when our guns were just getting into their stride. A squad of us were unloading rail sections from a waggon transport when a shell burst quite close and started the horses, with the result that a section fell on me.

"We've had a very busy time all the year. It's our work to make the light railways which carry the ammunition trolleys up to the guns, and I tell you we've had to lay no end of lines. I've been at this work before, but I've never yet seen so many guns and gunpits. If they fire them all at once I don't know how our fellows will stand the racket, far less the Germans. I think we've got almost as many 12-inch and 15-inch guns out there now as we had field guns at the beginning of the war.

"Tidy little engines we've got too, to haul the trucks. Only about a ton or two, built on the French style. The motor tractors mounted on caterpillar wheels are going to be useful also. Just the thing for going over wet, sloppy ground.

"I saw a good example of what the caterpillar system can really do. A big gun mounted on a caterpillars was sunk in the soft ground almost up to the gun itself. Yet when they started to move it forward it just seemed to lift itself out of the mud on to the level. It was a thundering big fellow too. I shouldn't like to be in the road of its shell."

"You could easily tell something was coming," said another wounded man, "by the way our aeroplanes were working. They were just everywhere, and the drone of their engines was in your ears all day long.

"The Boche planes had been coming over our lines quite a lot some weeks ago. Then we seemed to settle that it was time to stop them, and in a day or two they had almost disappeared.

"The Germans would not take any of our fellows single-handed. Nearly every time they were challenged by one of our fellows they turned round and dived for their own lines. They would only fight in squadrons, and not always even then.

"I saw one of our machines tackled by five Germans. They dived down on him while he was attacking one of their machines. He got away all right and sent one German to earth in a very rocky fashion. I did not see if he crashed for he came down behind the ridge."

"I was attached to a tented division of a field ambulance," said a R.A.M.C. Captain, wearing the ribbon of the D.S.O. "We were stationed in a village not so very far from the firing line, and during the past week or two we've had the hottest time of our lives. It wasn't only a case of extra casualties to be attended to. Over and above that we're had the excitement of being shelled nearly every day.

"Some of the shells came pretty close, too. Our ambulance occupied a large house with a courtyard, and one day when I was crossing this a big howitzer shell came pip-ab in the middle. Of course I got down. When I realised that it was all over and had begun to rise, I saw two of our orderlies sprinting across with a stretcher to pick up my pieces. I

"One thing particularly strikes me did not get it that time, though. about all the cases I have had to deal with, and that is their wonderful cheerfulness. In this last offensive they were all cases of wounds from shell-fire, perhaps the most painful wounds a man can get, yet by the way they talked no one would have imagined they were injured at all.

"It just amounts to this—our fellows know that man for man they are better than the Boche. They know that their machine is better, that they are better trained, that they are backed by more guns and shells.

"I heard two North of England men discussing the deep dugouts and extensive field fortifications which the Germans have constructed in an endeavour to stay our advance. Do you know, they drew the inference that the Germans were beaten just because they were digging themselves in so well. Here's how they put it:

"Germans be like fox gone to earth 'cos hounds have bate 'un'.

"Thee's reet, laad. And our 'tillery be hunters as' 'ell dig 'un oot."

"I had been feeling pretty sick because of the work and the never ending roar of the guns. But when I realised that these fellows were wounded, that they had come from all the slaughter and discomfort of the trenches, and were yet able to discuss the situation so cheerfully, believe me, a warm kind of feeling came round my heart which soon chased all my seediness away.

"Our fellows are wonderful. Just wonderful."

Carpentier's Idea If He Gets Any Extended Leave

That Georges Carpentier, the great boxer-aviator, of the French army, has expected leave of absence for some time is shown by the following article in "Answers" of August 4th, in which he says:

Perhaps in my spare moments, and with the help of my good friend, M. Victor Breyer, who, as perhaps you already know, has won the British Military Medal and the Croix de Guerre for his service at Ypres, and who in a charming little book has immortalized the English soldier with whom he worked and fought for many months—he was an officer interpreter to the 1st Wessex R. E.—I shall be able to address you in English next time I come to England, which I hope will be soon.

I will let you into a secret. For many, many days efforts have been made to secure for me leave of absence, so that I might embark on a kind of pro-Ally campaign. The idea was first originated in America, certain of whose sportsmen were desirous that I should tour the States, and preface exhibitions of boxing with a little war lecture, the proceeds to be given to that noble institution, the French Red Cross.

Touring Britain.

To such a proposition I was not altogether averse, but common-sense told me that there were many difficulties in the way, and I was not at all surprised when the scheme fell through. But I feel that if it can be managed at all, I should like to come to London, and make a visit to all the big towns in Britain, at each of which I would give my services to one or other of the big war charities.

From time to time, even when I have been in the very throes of a big and bloody battle, there has come to me from my British friends news that boxing has done and is doing as much, if not more, than any other sport, for charity.

Since I have been away from the front, M. Victor Breyner, who is the editor and one of the proprietors of that bright little newspaper, "Echo des Sports," Paris, and whom boxing friends will remember was one of the judges of my contest with Gunboat Smith at Olympia shortly before the war, has come to me to say that it has been suggested, if I could secure leave of absence, that I could not only help one or more of the big charities, but I could do useful propaganda work.

A Great Idea.

This is how the scheme has been put to me. A body of influential sportsmen in London could be formed, with, say, Lord Lonsdale at the head, who would select the charities which in their opinion are best known to the public, and which cannot be helped too generously.

Then they would organize various boxing tournaments, at which I would give a little story of my experiences and exploits in the war, and then engage in a sparring exhibition with some well-known celebrity.

For my own part, if the originators of the scheme can prevail on the authorities to grant me the necessary leave of absence, I say right now that I am ready to give my services, and will do all I can to help in the good work.

I am told that all the big towns there is some officially recognized body whose mission is to help some worthy charity. If these various bodies can be brought into line with the good people in London who believe I can do much to swell the funds of some worthy institution, and can frame a programme which will strike a new line in philanthropy, they may count upon me.

It must be clearly understood, of course, that I will not engage in any contest. My first fight will be after the war, and not before. I certainly have thought over the suggestion of my making a tour of England, and through the medium of my boxing skill, telling the people what all the soldiers are doing. The workers, who must have some sport—and there is nothing that appeals to them so much as boxing—would, I am sure, welcome such an idea as that to which I refer.

Billy Wells First.

The proposal is to start with my appearance in London to help the Red Cross, and then pay visits to Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, Glasgow, Cardiff, Newcastle, and other large industrial centres, which may be selected. I can only repeat that my services are at the disposal of these well-intentioned people. They must remember, however, that I am a soldier, and am in the hands of the authorities.

If the English sportsmen who have approached me prosecute their scheme successfully—that is, secure me leave of absence—they can relp upon me to do my share in the noble cause of charity. And there I must leave the matter.

Just this, by the way of conclusion. I entered into a contract during the past few days to have my first contest after the war in London. It will be with the English champion, Bombardier — now Sergeant-Major — Billy Wells, and will take place at Holborn Stadium, a building, I understand, which is a rare monument to the popularity and the need for boxing.

Ready for the Ring.

I am assured that Wells is altogether a better man since he joined the Army. Which is good to know. Further, I am told that it is his one ambition to meet me a third time. Well, I have done all I can to help to fratify his ambition, and if the war allows me we shall clash again.

I have told you that since August, 1914, I have had very little opportunity to box; but, though I say it, I do not think I have ever felt fitter, barring, of course, a little trouble which I still feel from the effects of bronchitis. But that will soon pass away.

According to present arrangements, Iam to meet Wells within six months after the cessation of hostilities. That will give me ample time to get into perfect shape, and to forget that for it is my intention, immediately the war makes it possible, to set up a training-camp—at Manitot, I expect, where I prepared for my contest which gave me the championship of Europe.

I shall have, as I have said, pretty well six months' training before I enter the ring. This will not be necessary to get rid of superfluous flesh. I am not predisposed to run to fat. My weight has not altered to any marked extent since I fought Gunboat Smith. I am more of a man, as you may suppose—now I have stopped growing—and I dare say when I get into the ring again I shall be short of thirteen stone. I have the feeling that I can hit harder than ever, for my frame is now thoroughly knitted.

After a fight with Bombardier Wells I had hoped to meet the Australian, Les Darcy. But, alas! poor boy, he has died. The news of his death made me very sad. I cannot imagine a more tragic ending to a career so full of promise.

I do not know, of course, but I should imagine that all Darcy's friends will for ever believe that the beginning of the end of this great, natural fighter set in when in a weak moment he quitted his country and left for America, to escape, so it is said, military service.

A Boxer's Tragedy.

If he had remained and joined the army, after the manner of all the boys of his home, he would have continued to be one of the most popular of all men in Australia. There was nothing that he might not have attained to. I can imagine that the saddest of all men was Darcy when he reached America, and began to realize how far he was away from his motherland.

There he was, in America, not only barred from boxing, but conscious that his folk at home were showering most burning criticism upon him. His mental anguish must have been terrible, and his troubles must have so impaired his constitution that he was already too weak to throw off any illness that seized hold of him. I had not, of course, seen Darcy, but from the moment that Mr. "Snowy" Baker, in 1914, offered me several thousands of pounds to visit Australia, and I had begun to hear about the young blacksmith, I set myself out to follow his career closely.

Such widely-different men did he beat that long ago I felt sure Darcy was one of the best boxers in the world. It was certainly one of my ambitions to meet him and beat him. However, life is such a gamble these days that one can but hope and aspire. Changes, great and wonderful, are inevitable, and as to the future of the boxing world, so far as individuals are concerned, it must remain a matter for speculation. That boxing will enjoy better popularity than ever I am sure.

During the past few months efforts have been made to secure my consent to have my first boxing contest, after my release from the army, in America and I was offered £12,000 to take part in a ten-rounds "no decision" contest in New York.

Such an offer was a tempting one, but the directors of the Holborn Stadium have succeeded in inducing me to refuse the trip to the States, and so, the war over, I shall meet Wells for the third time. I crave for that day to come. It won't be long now.

The war must be over this year!

Great Air Game Is Being Played By Sporting Men

War Correspondent Describes Watching Some of An Aviator's Moves

With the British Armies in the Field.—"The air game is a young man's game." Axiom of every European army.

To-day I stood on a British aerodrome just behind the lines watching the practice flights of the youngsters stationed there when a speck in the eastern sky caused someone to remark:

"Here comes a bird; it's Pat. Watch him."

I watched. At 120 miles an hour the speck came at us. Suddenly, at a height of about a mile the machine slowly turned over sidewise, then plunged earthward upside-down.

"He's done himself in!" someone exclaimed.

It certainly looked so. Pat's machine, the engine stopped, was plunging earthward, perpendicularly, spinning round and round on its own axis. Then suddenly it straightened out flat, went 100 yards and shot up into the air, again perpendicularly. Slowly, gracefully, the aeroplane turned over on its back, again upside down, looped the loop twice, flew on straight, rolled over and over, plunged sidewise, went into another nose spin, first with a right-hand spin, then a left-hand one, and so on until he had everyone gasping for breath.

Finally the machine came down and lit on the field. Out of the pilot's seat climbed a hooded, goggled being, which, with one quick jerk, tore hood and goggles from head and face, and behold: A kid, a boy, a stripling just turned twenty.

It was Pat, star pilot, Boche-killer, blushing and smiling like a sweet girl graduate. He wasn't swanking, nor swaggering, but behaving exactly like any kid home from school after algebra and football. For that is just the way he looked—like a kid who has done a little mathematics and considerable football—hair tumbled, face red, and glowing, eyes sparkling.

"Over The Line."

Nobody asked him if there had been anything doing over the line, not any more than one brother asks another that question when they meet at home after office hours. But, as you shall see, it had been what you or I would call a rather busy day. However, I did not find that out until later—the next day, in fact when I read the air reports.

An hour after Pat had come down I saw him again. This time he was washed and combed and had on his slacks—which is English army stuff for trousers—instead of his breeches and leggings. He was in the R.F.C. reading-room, a room in a shack, and next door to the dining room. He and another kid—a major, if you please—in an air pilot's uniform, were singing:

"Hallelujah! I'm a bum!
"Hallelujah! Bum again!
"Hallelujah! Give us a handout,
"To save us from sin."

This verse was sung in a deep bass to the well-known revivalist tune, then, as the next lines were reached, the bass changed into the high falsetto of the farmer's wife as he stands on the back porch:

"Oh, why don't you work,
As other men do?"

And then the bass again, imitating the bum:

"How the hell can I work,
When there's no work to do?"

There was nothing evil, nothing sacrilegious about it. Nothing more devilish than healthy boys, with bright, clean minds. These were just kids having fun.

Barbed Tennis Net.

Outside on a court leveled and laid out in what was recently a cornfield, four more kids were playing tennis across a net made of wire originally intended to keep trenches from caving. Near this was another court, a Badminton one, and here four more beardless boche-killers were raquetting feathered globules about like mad. All day they had been fighting in the air, miles above the earth, waylaying, stalking Prussian airmen in the clouds— these school kids— and now they were having a bit of relaxation before dinner. More kids still, were grouped about a tent on the edge of the Badminton court, and a hilarious contest was going on seeing who could climb over the roof of the tent in quickest time. The winner was the padre, the airman's chaplain—bully good man that he is—who came sliding down the near side of the steep tent-roof crying as he came:

"Here comes a perfectly good parson!"

And the kids about him, laughed like kids will at a Punch and Judy show, over the antics of their padre, who influences them like a real father.

The next day I read the air reports. I found all these kids had been in a big fight that very day. Thirty-nine of them had fought over sixty German airmen, and had bested them. They had sent seven enemy machines crashing through the clouds to the ground, bombed two railway stations, given the range for any number of direct hits on Prussian artillery, dived at, and silenced a number of anti-aircraft guns which were hampering them in their work.

And Pat?

Pat had attacked four German Albatros; machines single-handed and scattered them, all save one, which he riddled with his bullets and flung head-over-heels three miles to the earth, where it smashed and blazed and glowed until its was cinders, its pilot and observing officer perishing in the crash

And then, Pat, attacked in his turn by ten enemy machines as he flew alone three miles above the ground, escaped by a "nose spin" a literal drop out of the blue such as I had seen him do that afternoon over the

When I read these reports two thoughts chased themselves round and round in my head. One was.

"The air game is a young man's game."

And the other was in the guise of a haunting tune:

"Hallelujah! I'm a bum.
Hallelujah! Bum again!
Hallelujah! Give us a handout,
To save us from sin."

The laughter of Pat, the boy Boche-killer, as he came back in deep, burlesque tones, imitating the bum's reply to the farmer's wife, was part of the music:

"How the hell can I work,
When there's no work to do?"

COUGHS AND CALORIES.

Startling Statement Made by One of the German Scientists.

Those of us who have had coughs and colds during the last three months, and there are comparatively few who have wholly escaped the infection, ought to take a keen interest in the recent statements of a German scientist on the subject. The results of his painstaking research are of particular importance in these days because of the high cost of living.

Coughing, it seems, is frightfully expensive on the basis of present prices. Judging by the information that has just come to hand, it is difficult to see how poor people can afford to cough at all. Even the comparatively well-to-do must find that the indulgence adds painfully to the financial burden.

This German tells us that a person who coughs every quarter of an hour for ten hours uses up as much energy as can be produced by 250 calories, which is equivalent to the nourishment furnished by three eggs and two glasses of milk. If you like you can translate the nutritive energy into terms of beef stew, porterhouse steak, cabbage, potatoes, onions, or what not. The cost will be about the same, however, you undertake to repair the waste. Judging by the accurate reports of some of these diet squads, we should say that the cheapest way to maintain a first-class cough might be by feeding it on peanut butter sandwiches.

Of course, there is considerable elasticity in the form in which this German proposition is expressed. Just what is meant by coughing "every quarter of an hour"? Does it mean a fit of coughing or merely a single "bark"? It is plain that if a person has a ten-minute fit of coughing in every quarter of an hour for ten hours he is going to expend an enormous amount of energy. That means practically continuous coughing for ten hours, with four five-minute intervals of rest every hour. The estimated expenditure of energy would be far greater than the scientist has stated.

We cannot suppose that Teutonic thoroughness of investigation would permit such carlessness or elasticity of calculation. The scientist must have meant a single cough every quarter-hour, basing the energy waste on a total of forty coughs a day. But think of the tremendous amount of labour involved in reaching a discovery of such an accurate and significant a character, And yet, why should it not be possible to measure the energy of a cough as accurately as any other form of energy?

We are so, in this connection that in normal respiration the air is expelled from the lungs at the rate of four feet a second, whereas in violent coughing the exhalations may attain a velocity of 300 feet a second. The anat... effects of some coughing that is heard would indicate that this is an extremely modest estimate. Another important point that should be emphasized is that this wasted energy cannot be wholly compensated for by taking in its equivalent in heat units in the form of food. Much of the energy lost in coughing is bound to be a dead loss, however much additional food one may take as an offset.

This is an item of inefficiency, the remedy for which is largely under the control of the coughers. Most of us are inclined to be careless in the prompt curing of coughs, and, of course, they are persistent coughs that, while they last, are practically uncontrollable. Nevertheless, it is a fact that most coughing can be controlled. In seven manifestations out of ten the cougher can restrain himself if he determines to. It is simply a matter of will power. The appalling waste of energy involved is something that should impress us with the importance of greater self-control in this respect.—Province Journal.

THEY ARE NOT SENSITIVE, BUT CALLOUS.

There was a noteworthy sentence in the dispatch of Perceval Gibbon, describing in something like minute detail the price paid by General Cadorna to the Austrians for the miserable little mountain village of Selo. "I have always held," wrote Mr. Gibbon, "that what fighting men can endure to live through or die through, noncombatants like myself can endure to see and hear of."

That statement should be read and thoughtfully considered by not a few noncombatan's who, unlike the war correspondents in the various fields, have had no opportunity —as yet —to do more than hear of such awful facts as Mr. Gibson described with some approach to fullness and accuracy. Far too often, here in the United States, one must listen while a woman— and too frequently, at least it seems to be a man who speaks— coolly says: "I don't read about the war any more; its all too terrible. I don't understand how you can do it."

What makes assertions like these as irritating as they are stupid and disgusting is that invariably they are presented with a clear implication that they prove a delicacy and sensitiveness of mind which constitute superiority on the part of those who utter them, and that as obviously the hearer of them is expected to admit that he or she either has a morbid liking for tales of horror or else is too dull or too brutal to appreciate how horrible they are. As a matter of fact, the person who "cannot bear to read about the war," is neither sensitive nor superior, but callous and inferior.

The purpose of such a person is simply to avoid, as much as possible, the gaining of knowledge that would or might create a sense of obligation to form a definite judgment as to the rights and wrongs of the war, and, most of all, to escape the necessity, and even the opportunity, to feel the duty of taking, in regard to the war, personal action that might be troublesome, expensive or dangerous. That is all, and absolutely all, there is to these refusals to read war despatches, and those who make them are on the level where lives a young woman who said, the other day, when asked to make bandages for the Red Cross, 'Oh, I can't— it's so depressing to make bandages!"—New York Times.

RESTRAINING HIMSELF.

(From the New York American.

Walking through the village street one day, the widowed Lady Bountiful met old Farmer Stubbs on his way to market. Her greeting went unnoticed.

"Stubbs!" said she, indignantly, "You might at least raise your hat to me."

"I beg your pardon, milady," was the reply, "but my poor wife ain't dead more'n two weeks, and I ain't started lookin' at the wimmin yet."

MUNICIPAL SUPPLY OF BLACK DIAMONDS

Fire, Water and Light Committee Met Last Evening

The Fire, Water and Light Committee met at the conclusion of last night's council meeting and completed arrangements for the reception of a few more cars of coal with which to bolster up the municipal coal venture. At the council meeting earlier in the evening Ald. Stratton objected to a fixed price of ten dollars a ton, believing that a lower price should be possible. "Some way will be found of using up the balance if there happens to be any," remarked the alderman. Ald Smith was inclined to a similar opinion.

Ald. Dobbin, chairman of the Fire Water and Light Committee, assured the council that each of the members would have to share the responsibility of the municipal coal venture.

A meeting will be called later when the aldermen will be given an opportunity of going into the matter.

If there are any dividends they will be returned to the purchasers of coal.

MADE GUARDIANS OF MULES.

Illinois Artillerymen and Engineers Disgruntled Over Plebeian Work Given Them.

CAMP LOGAN, Houston, Tex., Sept. 6.—The work of attending to about 10,000 mules and horses at the Camp Logan remount station is to be allotted to a battalion either of the Illinois 2nd Field Artillery or the 1st Engineers, instead of being taken care of by labourers, as is the case at other cantonments. There is great anger over this action of the Government in sending soldiers who expect to be taught the tactics of warfare to care for mules.

Two Bombs Did All The Damage In The Chatham Raid

Barracks Were Fitted With Sleeping Hammocks and the Majority of the Men Were Asleep at the Time of the Attack—Raiders Were Not Located.

LONDON, Sept. 5.— The Chatham district for the first time experienced an air attack on Monday night, when one or more bombs fell on a section of the Royal Naval Barracks, killing 107 bluejackets outright and wounded 86 others. Four bombs in all fell about the barracks, but two were harmless, and in fact, apart from those which took such a heavy toll of lives, the damage in the whole area was insignificant. The barracks were fitted with sleeping hammocks and a majority of the men were asleep at the time of the attack.

The first indication of the presence of air raiders was the sound of engines overhead. The presence of high-powered machines overhead did not cause much alarm because notices had been published earlier in the evening that anti-aircraft practise would be carried out that night, and when the guns began firing it was assumed that the practice was in full swing.

Raiders Were Not Located.

Then came the unexpected. Loud explosions were heard in one part of the district, and then in another. The explosions then ceased, but after a few minutes they were heard again, and judging by the sounds it seemed that the air raiders had circled the town. In all about seventeen bombs were dropped and the raiders are thought to have been over the district nearly an hour. Searchlights sought out the raiders, but they failed to locate them, the visibility being low owing to a slight haze, notwithstanding the moonlight.

Immediately following the explosions in the barracks rescue parties were organized and the wounded were removed to hospitals, one of which came very near to being a target for a bomb.

Discipline prevailed completely over any natural tendency at alarm in the barracks. All survivors were instantly at their quarters and the greatest coolness was shown. A naval man, who was in the barracks at the time, gave the following account of the raid:

Flying Glass Did Damage.

"Most of us were asleep in our hammocks in the dormitory, which was in the large drill hall. We had no warning of any kind. Two clocks, which were in the adjoining parade ground, stopped at 11.12 o'clock, showing the hour of the explosions. I have been in some scraps, but I did not dream that anythin so sudden could happen. Before we knew what was happening the roof was lifted off the shop, blown into the air, and fell in a thousand pieces among the men. It was flying glass, which was thick and heavy, that did the damage. We were dashed out of our hammocks to the floor and all mixed up in broken glass. The men on either side of me were both killed. Officers were on the scene in a moment and worked with us the whole night getting the wounded to hospitals and the bodies to the gymnasium, which was used as a mortuary."

Another man sleeping in a different section of the dormitory said that he did not wait to put on his shoes, and did not know that he was walking on broken glass until long afterwards, when he found that his feet were bleeding. Still another man with a piece of glass in his head did not know it, the shock of the explosion being so great, and a man who was blown across the parade grounds and who alighted on his feet declared that he did not feel any the worse for his experience.

Survivors Complain Bitterly.

Some of the injured died during the night, and the survivors complain bitterly about their companions being killed without an opportunity to strike back.

"If we have to die, we want to die fighting," one bluejacket said.

"Most of us have seen fighting, and we want another go at the Huns."

A remarkable feature of the raid was that a comparatively few people in the bombed area were aware that there had been an attack until they arose the following morning. One bomb struck a small cottage, one of a row. The tenant and his daughter, who went into the garden to see what was happening, escaped injury, but the wife remained in the house and was killed.

Story Of The Plots At Montreal Outrival Old Time Dime Novel

Bandits and Anti-Conscriptionists Were United, According to the Story of Lalumiere Who Has Made a Confession to the Police—Officials Are Acting.

Montreal, September 5.—With the suicide on Sunday at Lachute of Joseph Handfield, alias Leduc, the veil has been lifted by the police on a series of episodes connected with the anti-conscription demonstrations in Montreal that rival the stirring deeds by which one was wont to pass the days of childhood in reading in the yellow colored pages of Deadwood Dick and Nick Carter.

Never in the history of the oldest city in Canada have the police had to deal with such a band of downright criminals, who planned murder as one might his evening's entertainment, as this band, still at large for the most part. One only has been run to earth and he is silent forever. He thought it better to die by his own hand than to give in to superior numbers, face trial for a series of the most dastardly crimes possible, including murder, and possible death on the gallows. He is Handfield, who comes of a well-known family, whose mother is still living, one of whose brothers is making a name for himself as a lawyer, and who has another who is a well-known west-end druggist.

The dead man himself had a criminal record, was out on ticket-of-leave, was a confirmed dope fiend, and he had as his main associate another ex-criminal, Henri Monette, alias Girard. Monette and another got away when the posse closed in around them at Lachute on Sunday, and latest reports were that they were headed into the Laurentian mountains, somewhere in the vicinity of St. Agathe, with the police in close pursuit. In the mountains they may be safe for weeks or until the snows and cold of winter drive them into civilisation, for it would take a battalion of men to scour the mountain fastnesses. Who is Monette's companion the police are not really sure.

Handfield's suicide and the chase after the others are the direct result of the arrest of Eli Lalumiere and the confession he has made. Lalumiere had become known as an anti-conscription orator without whose presence none of the meetings would be complete.

How then did it happen that this individual got mixed up with a gang of bandits of the very lowest calibre? That is a problem that is puzzling the police and for which they give two answers. The first may be dismissed with a few lines. It is that Handfield and Monette, having read of the vengeance conscriptionists had said they would like to wreak, offered themselves as men skilled in that sort of thing and their offer was accepted.

However it is upon the second answer that the police are relying and that answer is that it was German gold that brought about the connection between the anti-conscription ists, Lalumiere, Govey et al, and the professional criminals, Handfield and Monette. To this end the police have under suspicion a well-known merchant with a French-Canadian name whose mother is known to be German. He has a summer home on the shores of Lake St. Louis and less than a week ago gave a party at which the chief guests were Handfield and Monette. The entertainment even consisted of a ride in a fast motor boat on Lake St. Louis, a ride that gave those watching the house some uneasiness, for they had considerable difficulty in keeping up with the high power boat and so preventing the pair of criminals from getting away. The reason they were not arrested then is because Lalumiere had not yet told his story, and the net was not complete.

First Plan Was Murder.

The first outrage committed by the bandits was the blowing up of the summer home of Lord Atholstan at Cartierville. This has already been recorded. It has not been published however, that the dynamite outrage was only decided after a previous plan had failed. This plan was the murder in cold blood of Lord Atholstan. The story was told to the police by Lalumiere. The plan as concocted by Handfield and Monette was to drive up alongside Lord Atholstan as he motored into the city to the Montreal Star office from his summer home. Lalumiere was to furnish the automobile and the weapons necessary. Everything was on the point of being carried out when Lalumiere's conscience got the better of him. He supplied the automobile and the revolvers, but when the two bandits got started on their journey of death they discovered their weapons were empty.

When they located Lalumiere, so Lalumiere says, they upbraided him for having proved so chicken-hearted and with a revolver to his head made him promise he would personally lend his aid to blowing up Lord Atholstan's home. Lalumiere was one of the party that did that deed and they all escaped for several weeks.

Planned Other Outrages.

Finally, thinking that they had not been discovered, they had planned a series of similar outrages, which, if carried out, would have shaken Canada from one end to the other. First in the series was to be the blowing up of the Montreal Star office. Then was to follow the murder of the Solicitor-General for Canada, and finally the murder of Sir Robert Borden, with the possible blowing up of the Parliament Buildings.

Only one thing prevented the first of this series of crimes from being carried out, say the police, and that was the arrest of Lalumiere the very evening the Star was to be blown up.

All Exits Guarded.

By this time Lalumiere had told the police all he knew, several suspects had been arrested and questioned, as well as several who came in voluntarily with information, and the police thought it impossible for Handfield and Monette to get off the Island of Montreal, so closely were all the exits watched. They did get away, however, and on Friday night were reported to be in the woods near Assumption. A posse set out after them, but with no results. The next heard of them was from St Andrews. They passed through there in an auto, so the police in Lachute were told to be on the lookout. A dozen citizens were sworn in as police officers, and a running fight took place. When the auto was disabled the three bandits had a good head and took across the fields into the woods. Soon Hanfield headed for the river, and it was while attempting to swim in that he was hit in the arm by a bullet. That disabled him so he put back to shore. When he reached it he saw the posse were about to close in on him, and fearing death less than arrest, he put the muzzle of his revolver in his mouth and fired. The other two escaped.

Antis Lose Nerve.

The arrest of Lalumiere and the questioning of many others has badly damaged the anti-conscription cause and now the suicide of Handfield is sure to give it the coup-de-grace. For some days the speakers have not exhibited as much nerve as formerly and are now busy declaring that they had nothing to do with the Cartierville affair.

But while the back of the opposition to the Conscription bill has been broken, the police are not ceasing their activities. One of the stories they are investigating is that two people in clerical garb were seen to give an unusual rattle to the door of the store owned by Lalumiere's brother. In a moment they entered and the citizen who saw them thought the happening so strange that he waited around. In about fifteen minutes he saw three other people, also in clerical garb, emerge. Whether they were priests or people in disguise he did not know.

Guns Located.

Another point of investigation is a college run by an order of brothers not far from Montreal. The police have already paid a visit there and located enough guns and ammunition to stand a good long siege. It is thought the intention was, or is, to use them when the military came to collect the conscripts.

Handfield was a former soldier who was turned back from England. He then enlisted in another battalion and became chauffeur to the colonel. One day the colonel's auto disappeared and so did Handfield. He was apprehended some time later, thrown out of the military and sentenced to jail. It was while he was on ticket of leave that he started out to put a reign of terror in force in Montreal.

The arrest of Lalumiere, the suicide of Handfield, and all the rest have badly shattered the city's nerves. As a result all sorts of rumours were rampant yesterday, including a revolution at Valcartier and Quebec, and a general strike of the C.P.R.

"MOUNTAIN MADNESS"

By Anna Alice Chapin

His own self-contempt stung him, but had no power to shake that bitterly savage secret mood. He was jealous — sickeningly, maddeningly jealous, and there was not a nerve, nor muscle in his body that did not ache with the grip of it.

"A boutonniere, sir?"

Jack stared at the man as though he had suddenly been recalled from a great distance. A boutonniere! It seemed like a particularly silly joke, in his present frame of mind. He laughed, not very pleasantly, and the man started. He had been with Radnor, since he left college and knew every inflection in his voice. There was something out of tune about that laugh. "There is a gardenia, sir," he said, soothingly, "or if you would rather have a few violets, or——"

"Have you any mountain laurel?" asked Jack, sardonically.

Ware tried to conceal his instant fear that his master was ill or had lost his wits.

"I—I imagine it could be obtained, sir," he said, even more placatingly.

Again Radnor laughed, but there was a more human note in it this time. He was fond of the man. All at once he realized that the boutonniere was only one of a thousand symbols of the control which the civilized man places over the cave man within him.

"Let's have the gardenia, Ware," he said, gently.

The waxen white flower lay cold and perfect against the black of his coat; it set a sort of final seal upon his acceptance of the conventional world and its ways. He did not like gardenias, but the Lord knew they were symbolical! And the very perfume of the thing emphasized what he was trying to keep in mind self-mastery, gentleness, courtesy, good breeding, chivalry.

Suddenly he felt tired and depressed. It Enid did not care—and he could hardly persuade himself now that she ever cared—what a meaningless business it all was! He might as well chuck up everything and go west, or ship on board of a whaler, or——

"Atavism!" he muttered, half laughing to himself.

"I beg pardon, sir," said Ware.

There was a knock on the door — rather an odd knock. When you come to think of it, there is a good deal of individuality in the way persons announce their wish to enter. There is the obsequious tap of the servant, the light, confident touch of the intimate hand, the uncompromising thud of—let us say—the relentless bill collector. This knock was repeated twice; it was neither light nor loud. A man's hand had done it—and a man who was urgent and yet not excited.

Jack suppressed an exclamation as he sprang forward.

"How on earth did you get here?" he demanded.

"Asked the fellow downstairs for the number of your room and came up," said Martin in his slow, unhurried way. The calm poise and dignity of the man had never been more noticeable.

"Did anyone see you," said Jack, quickly.

"Quite a heap, I reckon," said Hale, without emotion. "Stared as though they had never seen a flannel shirt before in their lives."

He grinned amiably.

There is one queer thing about men, Hate they never so viciously they keep certain loyalty and freemasonry of sex all the time. Three minutes before Radnor had wanted to wring the mountaineer's neck. Now, with his enemy in immediate danger and facing it so coolly, he actually forgot his personal grievance and was filled with the idea—to stand by him. A woman is not often like that; she may help her rival out of trouble but she is acutely conscious of her grudge all the while.

"Here—come in!" exclaimed Jack, almost peremptorily, and Hale swung his great, graceful bulk into the room. "Ware, close that door! Hale, you're running an awful chance coming here! Denby is out after you and every one in the place is tipped off."

"I know," said Martin laconically. "But I had to come. I've come for Polly Mason."

"Pol—But Miss Mason isn't here!"

"Yes, she is. She came down here this afternoon. Fellow told me he'd seen her coming into the hotel. I've got to find her."

He looked at Jack Radnor searchingly, then nodded his head as though satisfied.

"I reckon you don't know any more about her than I do," he said.

"I?" exclaimed Radnor, in surprise and then flushed darkly. "You thought——"

"I didn't think anything," cut in Hale "Radnor, you're a white man. Help me out in this. I've got to get Polly."

Jack thought rapidly.

"If you asked for my room," he said abstractedly. "You can't stay here,—in my place, I mean."

"I don't want to stay here," Martin Hale said, interrupting him again "I want to hunt for her."

Ware stood bewildered, gazing first at one man and then at the other. His well-oiled little world was going very rustily indeed. He could not understand its gyrations at all.

"I have it!" cried Radnor, with enthusiasm. "But no," he added, considering, "it would be too risky, I suppose."

"What?" Martin, as we know, was not given to wasting words.

"It only occurred to me," said Jack, "that if you could get into this Powder Dance we are having this evening, you could come and go as you liked without being noticed. Every one will be masked until midnight, and you could probably locate Pol—Miss Mason before that. Still, as I say, it's risky."

"It's all right," said Martin without seeming to need time for deliberation. "I'll take a sporting chance anyway. But I'll need some clothes."

He looked down at his rough garments and then glanced at Jack's unexceptional evening dress.

"You know," said Radnor, "I think we're both mad—you especially!"

"I reckon so—sort of," rejoined Martin Hale, and smiled. But his face was drawn and anxious. "You see, it's this way: Polly's father's sick—one of his heart attacks. She's got to go to him, and I've got to take her."

"But—" Radnor was beginning when Hale stopped him.

"Hold on!" he said. "I know what I'm doing—just exactly—and I know what it means better than you do. So don't spring any 'buts' on me: they're an old story! If you can help me, do it! If not—" He paused, and his steady, unclouded gaze met Jack's.

"I can go to the devil?" supplemented the latter, but he was already tingling from the force of the other's persuasions and personality.

"Something like that!" agreed Martin Hale, nodding. "I'll manage it somehow anyway. Only this will be the squarest way."

For a moment the two men looked at each other. Then Radnor said, flushing darkly with understanding and masculine appreciation:

"By the Lord, you're a sport! Come on, man! I'll find you the war paint, and then—the game's up to you. Only—remember you can't duck me at the finish! I'm in with you to the last lap."

And he gripped the hand of the man whom he had been yearning to murder but a short half hour before. It is also a fact, curious but unquestionable, that for that moment, much as he loved Enid, he had forgotten her very existence!

CHAPTER XXII
AT THE POWDER DANCE

. . . My mind misgives
Some consequence, yet hanging in the stars,
Shall bitterly begin his fearful date
With this night's revels. . . . . .
—Shakespeare.

It was a Cotillon Poudre, which meant that the women dressed in powder and patches uniformly and the men did what they liked. There were five or six golf coats—hunting pink was taboo because the shade clashed with the cruder scarlet of the golf club. Here and there a venturesome male sported a domino or some vague attempt at a costume. But the girls were, one and all, arrayed in fluffy, pale-colored frocks, with their piled hair full of starch and court-plaster planted at alluring distances over their faces and shoulders.

The favor table was piled high with dainty trifles—most of them made by the women most concerned in the Cotillon. There were masks and snuff-boxes; tall canes and flower baskets, and—a pretty innovation started by Enid in the first place—were lanterns by which each dancer could find his or her partner.

The table was presided over by five Eastern Set. When Radnor led Martin of the smartest women of the Smart into a side apartment opening into the main ballroom, it was introducing him to an atmosphere which many social climbers had longed to breathe in vain.

The ballroom at the Casino was very charming that night. It was not a general dance; a small committee of select dowagers had gotten up and blue-penciled the invitations. As Warm Sulphur Springs, at certain seasons of the year, is almost as smart as Newport, Tuxedo and Aiken combined, an exclusive party meant not a few heart-burnings.

Persons counting on the laissez-faire of the average summer resort and reckoning the Casino go be a democratic and universal possession were outraged to find that for one evening, once in a while it was as hard to enter as the Celestial Gates.

MILK AS A FABRIC.

Chemistry Can Convert It Into Many Useful Materials.

Although any one will concede that man cannot live by bread alone, it has been thought possible to get along rather nicely if milk were added to the diet. But it remained for two French chemists, Francois Lebreil and Raoul Desgeorge, to conceive an idea whereby milk may also be made to yield a fabric which may be converted into clothing and ornaments.

The curds of the milk are subjected to a chemical treatment by means of which the mass is converted into a plastic substance which may be rolled into sheets resembling celluloid, from which buttons and other articles such as combs, umbrella handles, bric-a-brac and even imitation leather may be made, all of which are of attractive appearance and of excellent wearing qualities.

The milk is first robbed of its fat, after which it is warmed with rennet so as to form curds. It is then parboiled and exposed to the air and then is treated with acetone to give it the required hardness, plasticity and transparency. The product may be made so soft that it can be used as a substitute for silk in the manufacture of fine underwear, or it may be made solid enough to serve as a good imitation of ivory.—Popular Science Monthly.

PRESERVING EGGS.

Water Glass Will Keep Them Fresh Six Months or Longer.

Eggs are much cheaper in the spring than they are later on in the year, and spring eggs can easily be kept over until the high price season by putting them down in water glass, which can be purchased at drug stores for about 25 cents a quart.

A quart of water glass mixed with twelve quarts of water that has been boiled and then cooled will be sufficient to preserve about fifteen dozen eggs. A stronger solution should be used for eggs that are to be held six to eight months or longer.

Stir the water glass and water mixture until thoroughly mixed. Use a stone jar that has been thoroughly cleaned. The eggs should also be cleaned. Cover the bottom of the jar with eggs stood up on end, the small end down. Pack the eggs so they will cover the bottom. The eggs can all be packed at one time, one layer upon another, or the packing can be done from time to time. Pour in the mixture so the top layer of eggs will be covered fully two inches. A thin coating of paraffin poured over the top of the water glass mixture when the jar is filled will prevent evaporation; otherwise the mixture will require replacing as often as evaporation makes it necessary. Store the jar in a cool cellar.

How Kaffirs Smoke.

The natives of South Africa are inveterate smokers, but some of them indulge in the habit in a distinctly queer fashion. The natives of Harrismith, in the Orange River Colony, smoke in the following novel manner: A "pipe" is made by thrusting two sticks into the ground so as to meet at an angle; when they are withdrawn two tunnels are left behind. A hollow reed is stuck in one hole and the tobacco placed in the other and lighted. Before beginning operations the native fills his mouth with water, drawing in the smoke with a gurgling sound and blowing out the water and smoke through a second reed. It seems a mighty poor way of smoking to a white man, says a writer in the Wide World Magazine, but the Kaffirs are very fond of it.

The Sergeant's Threat.

Answering for absent comrades during roll call is quite usual with soldiers. Sergeants know themselves to be tricked in this fashion very often, but as detection of the culprits is almost impossible they have to content themselves with the use of a little threatening language toward their men. It was an Irish sergeant who recently delivered himself as follows when about to call the roll in a Dublin barracks:

"Now, mind ye, if I ketch any of ye sayin' yer here when yer not here yez'll go over there," pointing to the guardroom.

Varnish and Enamel.

Paints which dry with a high luster or gloss are called enamels. These are made from zinc oxide ground in varnish. Varnish is produced from fossil resins such as copal, kauri, etc. These resins, which originally flowed from trees, have been deposited for centuries in the earth. They are mined in Africa and New Zealand and are found in big lumps.

Not That Kind.

"Here you are, son," said the facetious man to the messenger boy. "Take this note to No. 1415 Umpty-ump street and see if you can't give me a correct imitation of Mercury."

"Aw, quit cher kiddin'," answered the lad. "I ain't no thermometer

Remembering Errors.

"Does your typewriter believe in the simplified spelling?"

"Oh, I rather think not. She always seems to spell words in the hardest way."

Rejected.

He—How'd you like a pet dog? She—Now, Charlie, haven't I told you that I don't intend to marry?

To act with common sense according to the moment is the best wisdom I know.

Woodlots on the farms can be made an important factor in the relief of the threatened fuel shortage.

You may be deceived
some day by an imitation of
"SALADA" B114
and possibly you will not detect this imitation until the tea-pot reveals it. Demand always the genuine "Salada" in the sealed, aluminum packet, and see that you get it, if you want that unique flavour of fresh, clean leaves properly prepared and packed.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Bit of Seaweed

A Story of the War For Cuba.

By ETHEL HOLMES

Kate Langdon was a character. Not especially pretty, she had a way with her that first attracted people's attention, then won them. Some said she was very deep, others that she was a simple child of nature. She was certainly reckless. She would flirt with several men at a time without heeding the consequences and when cornered would, if possible, dodge them all by flight, leaving them to settle the matter among themselves.

And so it was that some blamed her, others defended her, but all were amused by her. It was very interesting to see a middy come upon the edge of the vortex, get drawn in, drop out, giving place perhaps to a fellow middy, perhaps to an officer. Whether the girl realized the wrong she was often doing, whether she was unconscious of it or whether she had no appreciation of the tenderness of men's hearts, certain it is that she never seemed either ashamed of her conquests or proud of them. Indeed, she gave every evidence that she regretted them.

A fine field for such girls is either the West Point or Annapolis academy, where young men are trained for the army or navy. Kate Langdon the year of the breaking out of the Spanish-American war visited the Naval academy as the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Lyall, the wife of one of the professors. She hadn't been there a week before she had half a dozen middies "by the ears."

In the class to be graduated the following spring were two young men, Hector Peckham and Leslie Holt. Both met Kate Langdon, and both fell violently in love with her. In the government academies the standard of honor is very high. Neither of the cadets would take the slightest advantage of the other, but neither could find out which was really the favored one. Nor were they ever sure but that one of several other middies might not after all carry off the prize.

Peckham finally won. Kate gave him her heart and, to the surprise of every one, gave him the whole of it. There were a number of disappointments in consequence of this victory, the most serious of which was Leslie Holt. Kate had given him a great deal of encouragement and for some time after she came to a decision hadn't the heart to break with him. When it finally came out that Peckham had won, Holt went to see her to ask if the news were true. She confessed, and he told her that she had wrecked his life.

Young men have said this before to young women, to marry some other and live happily. Some have remained single, cherishing their idol in their hearts, to meet that idol when past middle age and find it demolished. Holt so long as he lived—he did not live long—never recovered from his infatuation. The words he used at his last meeting with Kate Langdon made the first change in her. By them her light, gladsome nature received its first sobering.

Meanwhile the Cuban war was coming on, and ships and munitions were being hurriedly put in condition for war. And the middies, too, were being hurried on in their academic course, to be graduated as soon as hostilities commenced.

The following spring Peckham and Holt were graduated and assigned to a war vessel sailing for Cuba. Peckham and Kate were married before he sailed. The wedding was notable from the number of disappointed young men in attendance. But every man of them swore by the bride and considered the groom the luckiest man that had ever wooed woman.

Kate, having joined the navy matrimonially, felt at home at a naval station, and her aunt, who adored her, invited her to remain with her indefinitely. So Kate stayed where she would be in touch with her husband far more than at home. That was an exciting summer. First came news of the fight in Manila bay, then the entrance of the Spanish Admiral Cervera's fleet into Cuban waters, its attempt to escape and its destruction.

Peckham and Holt went through this last fight, and when it was over the latter officer was ordered to the command of a small supply boat and directed to sail for the Brooklyn navy yard.

"Can I do anything for you at home?" he asked of Peckham.

"Nothing, unless you will take a letter for my wife. You will mail it as soon as you get to Brooklyn."

"With pleasure," replied Holt.

Peckham wrote a short note to his wife and gave it to Holt.

"The trap I'm to command is not very seaworthy," said the latter. "If I meet a big blow I may not get through. But I promise you, Hector, that your wife shall have the letter."

Peckham hoped that his friend would get through safely, and they parted.

One morning young Mrs. Peckham was sitting in her room at Annapolis reading accounts of the naval fight off Cuba—she had read them many times before—when a draft blew open the door and there came into the room a strong smell of the sea. Standing before the opening was Leslie Holt, pale and exhausted.

"Why, Mr. Holt!" exclaimed Mrs. Peckham.

Without a word he handed her a letter. Thinking it to be from her husband or that it might bring her bad news from him, her attention was momentarily turned from its bearer to the letter. It bore evidence of having been wet. A dampness clung to it, and the letters of the address had run together. She tore it open and read it. It was simply an announcement that the writer was well, had suffered nothing in the recent engagement and hoped before many weeks to return to her. Having satisfied herself that it boded no harm to the man she loved, she turned to its bearer. He was not there.

Thinking that what had passed between them before her marriage had led him to go away without even having been thanked, she tossed the letter on a table and ran out into the hall to stop him. Not finding him in the hall, she went out on to the porch. He was not there, nor was he anywhere to be seen, though there was nothing for some distance to obstruct her vision.

"Strange!" she said to herself and returned to her room, a fear coming over her that the affair was in some way connected with a misfortune to her husband. Going to the table, she was about to snatch up the letter when she saw that it was not where she had put it. Looking on the floor for it, she did not find it.

"I'm sure something has happened to Hector," she moaned. "Leslie Holt slipped away on purpose so that he wouldn't have to say anything to me about it. But how pale he looked and how exhausted!"

Thinking a draft might have blown the letter off the table, she looked about until she saw something of a light brownish color in a corner. She saw that it was the letter, which had been discolored, she seized it. What was her surprise to find a seaweed.

There was something so uncanny in all this that she was now thoroughly frightened. Dropping the seaweed, she put both hands to her temples in an effort to regain her equanimity. Then, rushing out of the room, she ran to her aunt and sank in a swoon.

Ten minutes later Dr. Coggswell, medical officer at the academy, was called to Professor Lyall's quarters. He found Mrs. Peckham lying on a bed in a high state of nervous excitement. Mrs. Lyall told the doctor, before he saw the patient, the story her niece had told her, and he did not permit the invalid to go over it again. He said that the expectation for a long while that her husband would at any time participate in a naval engagement and the excitement attending the recent fight had been a strain upon her nerves that had produced hallucination. He prescribed a sedative and left directions that she was to be kept quiet.

But Mrs. Peckham did not recover from the strain as soon as was expected. And one morning something occurred to give her a terrible back set. A telegram from Key West appeared in a morning paper stating that a little naval tender, commanded by Leslie Holt, had been wrecked on one of the keys and all on board had been lost.

Mrs. Lyall kept this news from her niece as long as she dared, hoping the invalid would gain strength and there would be less danger in communicating it to her. Finally, fearing that Kate might hear it from others, she told her of young Holt's death.

If anything was needed to complete the conviction that the wraith of the man who had told her she had wrecked his life had visited her, the announcement of his death supplied it. A subsequent letter, however, from Peckham served to lighten the blow. Kate felt that the matter had no reference to her husband; it was between her and Leslie Holt. She considered it a punishment for having trifled with him and brooded and brooded, and all efforts on the part of her friends to convince her that there was nothing in it except a creation of her own brain under a nervous strain were fruitless.

In time Peckham came north, and it was hoped that his presence would lift the cloud that hung over his wife. It helped her, but did not cure her. She went about as before, but how changed!

"What a sad sight is Mrs. Peckham," said one of the men with whom she had trifled—one of the older ones, an officer. "The matter proves the innocence of her action when so many of us were attentive to her. Wicked people are not remorseful. The tender consciences are usually to be found in innocence. Had she been a heartless, a wicked flirt the fact that she had wrecked a man's life would have pleased her. Instead of this, his telling her that she had wrecked his life wrecked hers. He should not have said such a thing to her, and he would not have said it had he been older and realized the effect it would have on her."

It is years since this shock came to Mrs. Peckham, and, although it has somewhat worn away, it has left its effects. She is still beloved, for at heart she is the same innocent woman, though very different from the days of her girlhood. Every one except herself refers the visit of the wraith to a shock coming from overstrained nerves. She would as soon doubt her existence as doubt the reality of the visit. After sufficiently recovering to talk about it she declared that she not only smelled the salt air of the sea, but saw Leslie Holt standing before her—not lifelike, it is true, because he was very pale, and he had the appearance of having been in the water. The only thing to prove her position was the letter she received and the seaweed, but that disappeared during her first shock and never was recovered.

DYSENTERY
DANGEROUS

Dysentry is one of the worst forms of bowel complaint. It comes on so suddenly, the pains in the bowels become intense, the discharges occur with great rapidity, and are very often accompanied by blood, and the action on the system so weakening that its termination often proves fatal.

When the bowels get loosened up in this way, and you wish to check the unnatural discharge without bringing on constipation, there is only one remedy to use, and that is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

This remedy is not an experiment as it has been used in thousands of Canadian homes during the past 72 years.

Mrs. Albert Fearon, Bryant's Corner, N. B., writes: "I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for the past ten years, and I would not be without it in the house.

Last fall my little boy, three years old, took very bad with dysentery. After taking 3 or 4 doses of "Dr. Fowler's" he began to improve, and before he had used all the bottle he was entirely cured. I sincerely recommend it to all."

There are many cheap imitations of this sterling remedy on the market. Ask for Dr. Fowler's and see that you get the genuine when you ask for it. Price 35c. Put up only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Cornmeal Mush.

It has been found after careful tests that five pounds and two ounces of corn are required to produce one pound of pork—that is, a hog must consume more than five pounds of corn to gain a pound in weight.

Cornmeal mush or cornbread, it follows, is vastly more economical as a food for our tables than ham or bacon.

The only practical difficulty in benefiting by this knowledge is that many people think that corn is so much better when it is transmuted by the lowly hog that it is worth five times the original price.

The Chameleon.

A general belief is that the chameleon changes its color in accordance with its surroundings. Some experiments throw doubt on this view. The color changes seem to be regulated by light, temperature, excitement, etc. Thus one placed in sunlight so that only one side was exposed to the rays of the sun became dark brown on this side and pale brown mottled with green on the other. Placed in a dark box and kept at a temperature of 730 degrees Fahrenheit, another emerged a brilliant green. Another specimen in a dark box at 500 degrees Fahrenheit assumed a uniform salty-gray color.

A Newly-Discovered People.

An interesting tribe on the Upper Amazon has been discovered, which, in its division of work, is reminiscent of the guilds of the Middle Ages. One portion makes clothing and nothing else; another one is purely agricultural; another devotes its time and labor to the construction of weapons and so on. Their pottery, however, is the most notable of their productions. Some of these jars are extremely large but very thin, although strong and durable. Some of the smaller vessels are almost as thin as paper.

Quite a Feat.

HANGING UNMOUNTED FLAGS.

Correct Position of the Union to the Eye of the Observer.

It is sometimes a bit puzzling to know just how to hang a flag—just what is the correct position of the union. A letter to the New York Tribune tells exactly how it should be hung:

"All rules for hanging against a wall a flag which is not attached to its staff are in reference to the right or left hand of the observer. The union will be in the upper right hand corner if the stripes are perpendicular. Thus on a street running north and south the flags on the east side will have their unions toward the north and those on the west side will all have their unions toward the south unless some of them are hung with stripes horizontal, when the position of the union will be reversed. As one drives down the street this may give at first the impression that there is no uniformity, though all the flags may be correctly hung, but every flag will be right side out despite the diversity."

The writer adds that a street banner should be hung across the street at an equal distance from both curbs; that a flag not attached to a staff hung upon a wall should have the union at the top; that the union should be at the left of the observer if the stripes are horizontal; that the union should be at the right of the observer if the stripes are perpendicular.

HOW TO WIN SUCCESS.

Have Confidence In Yourself and Do Not Lean Upon Others.

Power is the goal of every worthy ambition, and only weakness comes from imitation or dependence on others. Power is self developed, self generated. We cannot increase the strength of our muscles by sitting in a gymnasium and letting another exercise for us.

Nothing else so destroys the power to stand alone as the habit of leaning upon others. If you lean you will never be strong or original. Stand alone or bury your ambition to be somebody in the world.

The man who tries to give his children a start in the world so that they will not have so hard a time as he had is unknowingly bringing disaster upon them. What he calls giving them a start will probably give them a setback in the world. Young people need all the motive power they can get. They are naturally leaners, imitators, copiers, and it is easy for them to develop into echoes or imitations. They will not walk alone while you furnish crutches; they will lean upon you just as long as you will let them.

One of the greatest delusions that a human being could ever have is that he is permanently benefited by continued assistance from others.

Touchy People.

Beware of touchy people. There are always some about ready to pester you in some way. Hurry on past so you cannot hear them and above all refuse to deny what they say. Just keep sweet and go ahead and let their unkind words swelter in the gloaming. How much time and patience are wasted on touchy people! And yet such people think they are the salt of the earth and everybody else dirty water. It is a real wickedness to be touchy. It is as bad as lying and cheating. It does the world as much harm. We knew a touchy person one time whose touchiness struck in on him and he died. We hope all our gentle readers will escape so sorry a fate

FLORIDA OF RUSSIA

The Historic Crimean Peninsula of the Black Sea.

HORRORS OF ITS GREAT WAR.

In This Famous Conflict Soldiers Died Like Flies From Disease and Florence Nightingale Won Her Crown of Glory on the Battlefield.

"Hanging down into the Black sea like a butcher's cleaver, with its handle pointed east and the near corner of the blade joined to the mainland of Russia, the Crimea, where it was first planned to exile the czar when he abdicated, is about as near to being an island as a peninsula well can be, even though a very narrow strait is the only water that lies between it and a second connection with the mainland. On the one side—to the west—lies the Perekop gulf, and to the east, shut out from the Black sea by the handle of the cleaver, is the sea of Azov."

Thus the Crimea is outlined in a bulletin by the National Geographic society from its Washington headquarters for geographic research, concerning this Florida of Russia jutting out into Europe's inland sea.

"With an area matching that of New Hampshire, a population equal to that of New Hampshire and Vermont together and a climate that borrows good features from Florida and southern California and bad ones from many places, the Crimea is one of the most fascinating bits of territory between Portugal and Cochin China. Its populace a congress of races, its industries ranging from the growing of subtropical fruits and the housing of Russia's elite as they flee from the cold, to the herding of sheep and the growing of grain, it is a place of many sided activities.

"As the men of wealth of America have their winter homes in Florida and those of western Europe have theirs along the Riviera, the people of position in Russia have their country seats in the Crimea. And beautiful places they are, for in Russia the rich are very rich. The height of the social season is from the middle of August to the 1st of November.

"The peninsula is occupied by 855,000 people, according to the last census, mostly Turkish speaking Tartars, with a scattering of Russians, Greeks, Germans and Jews. Cleanliness and morality are said to be proverbial traits of the Crimean Tartars, who have been undergoing the influences of Russification for several generations. They have taken up vine culture, fruit growing and kindred occupations with a zeal seldom equaled east of the Aegean.

"Of course most interesting of all things Crimean are its history, its fortress and its imperial palace. In the second century B. C. the Scythians founded a kingdom there, and the land passed through many changes, now under one sovereignty, and now under another, finally passing to the Tartars, who in turn were brought under the rule of the Turks. In 1783 Russia forced the last khan to abdicate and made the Crimea a part of one of her provinces. The Crim Tartars, who give the peninsula its name by reason of their substantial admixture of Greek and other bloods, have lost most of the Mongolian features, being slender in build, possessing aquiline noses, eyes that have lost the oriental slant and countenances not quite so inscrutable as the eastern type.

"In the Crimean war, fought by England, France and Turkey against Russia, the final test of strength came at Sebastopol. Here the factors of unlimited resources operated in the allies' favor. Through their command of the sea they could secure everything needed, while the Russians could bring up their supplies only across the barren steppes, whose highways were marked at every step by the dead and the dying, both man and beast.

"The novels of Tolstoy give a graphic picture of the Crimean war from the Russian viewpoint, depicting the miseries of the march, the anguish of the life in the casemates and the nerve destroying ordeal of manning the lines under shellfire, there to await the night attack that might or might not come. It was in this war that Florence Nightingale rendered services as a nurse that made her name a synonym of ministering angel on the world's battlefields. Then men knew nothing of the cause of cholera and such diseases, and the soldiers died like flies. It is estimated that 50,000 British soldiers lie buried in the cemetery outside of Sebastopol.

"The imperial large palace, to which the dethroned monarch was to retire is situated at Livadia surrounded by a magnificent park. It is of recent construction and was completed in 1916. Hard by is the simply constructed small palace, in an upper room of which Alexander III. died. In no other country in the world was the reigning ruler possessed of so many lands or such extensive properties as was the case in Russia."

SHOTS FROM THE SKY.

Meteors That Bombard Us and the Puzzle of Their Origin.

Most persons have no comprehension of the actual bombardment to which the earth is continually subjected from the heavens. Millions of small meteors enter the atmosphere every twenty-four hours, and in addition to these it has been calculated that on the average not less than a hundred large meteorites strike the earth somewhere every year. The small meteors are totally consumed by the heat and friction, and only their slowly settling dust ever touches the earth's surface, although any one of them if not resisted by the air would hit with from twenty to a hundred times the velocity of the swiftest bullet.

The big meteorites, on the contrary, which frequently consist of solid iron, often get through the airy shield with enough of their original velocity left to bury themselves many feet in the hardest soil. They constitute a real peril. Although the chance of anybody being hit by a meteorite is almost infinitely small, yet the annals of mankind show that a few persons have actually been killed by these strange shots from the sky.

Whence do they come? The small meteors are apparently the debris of those hardly less mysterious bodies, comets, but nobody has yet suggested a satisfactory origin for the great meteorites.—Garrett P. Serviss

HEROES OF THE SEA.

They Calmly Awaited Death With a Song Upon Their Lips.

The British transport Tyndareus struck a mine off southernmost Africa. She began to settle by the head. Immediately "assembly" was sounded the men put on their lifebelts and stood at attention till the roll was called. Then the order "Stand easy" was given, and they began to sing as fervently as though marching homeward on leave through a lane of France or Flanders.

They were perfectly sure that most of them would find a grave in the sea that engulfed so many of their fellows. They had no hope of rescue. They stood exactly as the men of the Birkenhead stood when they went to their doom and their imperishable renown off the same coast sixty-five years before.

But the sequel by a modern miracle was happily otherwise. Two steamers summoned by wireless came and towed to port the foundering vessel, with a display of seamanship on the part of the crews of all three ships that has maintained the British navy's proud traditions.

The bravery of those who had already given up their lives as lost was just as sublime as if that ultimate forfeit had been required. Wherever the deed is known it will stir the pulses of men, this story of heroism quite as exalted as any that Homer or Plutarch immortalized.

A Comet Scare.

Joseph Jerome Lafrancais de Lalande, the popular French astronomer of the eighteenth century, differed from Newton's view that Providence had so arranged matters as to make collision of the earth with a comet impossible and wrote a paper to prove that it was only very improbable. This paper, which was to have been read with others before the French academy on a certain day in 1773, got crowded out, but the Parisian public, hearing of it, made up its mind that Lalande had predicted the impending destruction of the earth, and such panic ensued that the police had to order the publication of the paper to reassure the public mind. But even then it was popularly believed that the paper had been deliberately toned down, and comet panics ensued for a quarter of a century.

Cold Feet.

Persons afflicted with cold feet, instead of taking a hot flatiron or brick to bed with them, as was once the custom, may now wear either "bed shoes" or "feet envelopes" of elderdown flannel. The latter are easily made. Take a yard and a half of elderdown flannel, a yard wide. Fold this together envelope style, the fuzzy side within, leaving eight or ten inches for the flap. Bind it all around with ribbon to match.

GUARD THE REFRIGERATOR.

If Not Kept Clean It Is a Menace to the Health of the Family.

One of the most important articles of household equipment is the unassuming and, it is to be feared, often neglected icebox.

There is no greater menace to the health of the family than a refrigerator which does not refrigerate or one which it is impossible to keep in a perfect sanitary condition.

The least important thing about a refrigerator is its outside appearance.

While the expensive porcelain and enamel ones are pleasant to own, a less expensive hardwood one with a smooth, plain surface is just as satisfactory and easy to clean.

Coolness, cleanliness and convenience are the three "c's" that are absolutely essential to the construction of a refrigerator.

Always wash the ice before putting it into its compartment, otherwise the straws and dust may clog up the drain pipe.

The floors and shelves of the refrigerator should be washed every day with a solution of soda, and at least once a week the refrigerator should be thoroughly cleaned.

Use a solution of soda and water to clean out the drain pipe and pan. Then scald them out thoroughly with boiling water.

STRENGTH OF WOOD.

A piece of Douglas fir, 16 feet long and 16 by 8 inches in cross section, stood a pressure of 88,400 pounds before breaking at the test conducted in the engineering laboratory of the University of Washington by C. W. Zimmermann of the United States forest service.

The experiment was a demonstration of the standard used by the forest service in testing bridge spans. The beam was held by a fifteen foot support, and the load was concentrated at two points five feet from each end of the beam. As pressure was applied the beam continued to bend until the point of maximum deflection was reached. Measurements were then taken, and it was found that the beam had bent 2.85 inches under the pressure of 50,000 pounds. This occurred two minutes after the test started.

Eight minutes later, after 88,400 pounds of additional weight had been added, the beam broke. During this time there was no further deflection of the piece. Mr. Zimmermann explained that the small fibers of the wood were continually giving way under the pressure, and at the end of eight minutes the beam, sufficiently weakened, snapped suddenly.

Aluminum Pots and Pans.

Scraping aluminum cooking utensils must always be done with a wooden spoon, since aluminum is soft and scratches easily. Strong alkalis are not available because they attack and dissolve the metal. Only mild soaps must be used. How, then, can that horrid discoloration be removed? It is very simply done.

Take a piece of rhubarb, either fresh or canned, cut it into small pieces and boil the pieces in the discolored kettle until it is clean. The acid of the rhubarb will remove the discoloration without in any way injuring the metal. Of course the rhubarb used for the purpose must be thrown away afterward. When a vessel has been cleaned in this way it will need a little rubbing up to secure a bright metallic surface.

John Milton's Cottage.

One of the best preserved historic country houses in all England is John Milton's cottage at Chalfont St. Giles, to which the blind and aging poet fled when the great plague swooped down on London. That was in July, 1665, and Milton had just finished "Paradise Lost" and received a five pound note for it, with a promise of three more five pound notes if the poem sold four editions of 1,300 copies each. The cottage stands at the top of the village, and it is in practically the same condition as when Milton left it. Here the poet received his guests during the latter part of his life.

Underwater Navigation.

According to all accounts, the hardships of underwater navigation are extreme and very exhausting to the nerves. The air is oppressive and so damp, owing to "sweating," that the interior has to be lined with cork or other absorbing substances. An overpowering tendency to sleep seizes upon the men, and the confinement and constant anxiety are terribly wearing.

EATING AND CHEWING.

Importance of Long and Thorough Mastication of Food.

"The idea prevails in most minds," says a prominent physician, "that the purpose of chewing food thoroughly is to break it up into small particles, with the main idea in mind that small particles are easily digestible, while large particles are impossible or difficult to digest. That idea is incorrect.

"It has been shown in the laboratory that a cube of meat which measures an inch will digest almost as quickly as one which measures one-fourth of an inch. A dog will swallow a piece of meat three inches or four inches long, and almost as thick, without chewing it at all. Yet a dog seldom has indigestion, except when some food faddist or fanatic tries to make the brute less brutal by turning a naturally carnivorous canine into a vegetarian animal.

"The point is that thorough mastication makes digestion more easy not because the food is broken up into finer particles, but because food held in the mouth a great length of time and more carefully masticated has usually mixed with it a greater amount of saliva and its ptyalin ferment for the digestion of starchy elements. To hold food in the mouth until it is thoroughly masticated requires a certain amount of attention, which, by the way, is the all important thing in the digestion of foods. This attention people do not always give. Saliva does not flow well when your mind is not on your eating."—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Caribou of Alaska.

The chief food of the caribou of Alaska is reindeer moss, of a greenish white color, which is scattered over the hills and mountains of Alaska. Their favorite feeding grounds are on the treeless and semitreeless parts of the territory, including the tundras along the coast of the Arctic ocean, and down to the Pacific side of the Alaska peninsula. They scatter widely in summer and collect in herds in the fall. Each herd has its leader, and it is said that if the leader is killed the rest of the herd becomes panic stricken and stampedes back and forth until another animal takes the lead.

Plenty of Cause.

"You say that Miss Oldstyle is suffering from severe mental shock? What caused it?"

"Why, she's been claiming that she's only twenty-eight years old, and then somebody found her name in one of those 'thirty years ago' columns in the newspapers."

A Fresh Start.

"Send me some money to get me out of this trouble," wrote the wayward youth, "and I promise to begin all over again."

"Yes," muttered the father, crumpling up the letter in his horny fist, "that's precisely what you would do if I sent it."

Conscious Virtue.

Conscious virtue is the only foundation of all happiness, for riches, power, rank or whatever, in the common acceptation of the world, is supposed to constitute happiness, will never quiet, much less cure, the inward pangs of guilt.—Lord Chesterfield.

Brigandine.

The word brigandine is used in Jeremiah xlvi. 4, to signify a coat of mail. Milton says, "Then put on all thy gorgeous arms, thy helmet and brigandine of brass."

A Left Handed Compliment.

THE ITALIANS MAKE FRESH PROGRESS

Open Way For A Wedge Between Austrian Armies

Desperate Battle Raging For Positions Northeast of Gorizia

Repeated Attacks by the Austrians on the Carso Were Broken Up by the Italians---German Attacks on the Aisne Front Prove a Failure While French Win Near Rheims---Germans Claim 7500 Prisoners and 180 Guns Taken in the Riga Offensive.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

ROME, September 6.—Desperate battle for possession of positions in the district northeast of Gorizia on the Austro-Italian front is continuing, according to to-day's War Office statement. The Italians yesterday took more than five hundred prisoners.

The text of the statement reads: "The struggle continued northeast of Gorizia yesterday. We captured twenty-six officers and more than 500 men. On the Carso repeated attacks by the enemy south of the Brestovizza Valley were broken up by our firm resistance and prompt counter attacks. We made about 200 prisoners.

"On the Trentino front parties of our arditi destroyed one of the enemy's advanced positions near Boone Chiez, and emplacements in the Zures region east of Lake Garda.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, September 6.—The Russians are continuing their retreat toward the northeast in the Riga region, crossing the Melupe River, the War Office announces.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

night were repelled by the French, says to-day's official statement. Heavy artillery fighting occurred on the Champagne and Verdun fronts. In a surprise attack near Rheims the French penetrated the German lines to a considerable extent.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

BERLIN, September 6.—More than seven thousand five hundred prisoners have so far been taken by the Germans in the region of Riga, Army Headquarters announced to-day. Guns to the number of one hundred and eighty have been taken.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, September 6.—On the night of September 4-5 German aircraft dropped bombs on three hospitals, says to-day's official communication. "Local fighting and patrol encounters occurred during the night southeast of St. Julien and east of Fleurbaix."

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, September 6.—It is semi-officially announced that a German fleet has appeared in the Gulf of Riga. During the past two days the Riga front has been broken on a width of thirty versts. Throughout Tuesday the Germans energetically pursued their offensive, particularly north of Uxkull in order to cut the Riga-Venden railway.

The retreat of the Russians from Riga over a neck of land a mile and a half wide between Lake Kish and Lake Egal, is being accomplished with the greatest difficulty, and with the enemy constantly shelling the rearguard. This route is along the Pskoff railway and is the only exit from the Cul de Sac, a German column having moved up from the Uxkull direction cutting off the Russian retreat to the southeast. The civilian head of the War Ministry, Bario Seavinhoff, has issued a statement saying that the success of the measures which will be taken to check the advance "wholly depends upon the behaviour of our troops."

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, September 6.—The results of municipal elections just completed are announced as a complete victory for the Radicals, Social Revolutionaries and Bolsheveki. The Moderate Socialists and Constitutional Democrats, regarded as close friends of the Allies, were defeated.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

ZURICH, Switzerland, September 6.—According to information received here from Vienna the Central Powers have decided to carry out a partition of Poland. Germany will annex such parts of Russian Poland as she needs "to rectify her strategic frontier," amounting to one-tenth of the territory. Austria will annex the remaining nine-tenths.

RUSSIAN CIVILIANS CAPTURED

Delayed Too Long in Attempting to Leave Riga and Were Caught By Germans

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

(By William G. Sheppard, U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

PETROGRAD, Sept. 6, 1917.—Thousands of Russian civilians waited too long before obeying orders to flee from Riga. They were captured by the invading Germans. Refugees from the Baltic city arriving to-day included some who were aboard the last train to leave. Immediately after they pulled out, while several train loads of others were assembled, the Germans cut across the railroad from the east. All remaining in the city were bottled up. No Americans were in Riga when the Germans occupied the city.

BRITISH AIR MEN ACTIVE

Bombing German Establishments Behind Western Front

Canadian Press Despatch:

CHINESE TO HELP ALLIES IN EUROPE

Canadian Press Despatch:

It is also asserted the Japanese will fill large gaps in the Russian ranks.

PETERBORO' DRAFTS WILL REINFORCE FAMOUS BATTALIONS

Men Called Out Under the Military Service Act Will Eventually Be Drafted to the 2nd and 21st Eastern Ontario Units at the Front

THE PRELIMINARY TRAINING

Canadian Press Despatch:

OTTAWA, Sept. 6.—The men called under the Military Service Act will be attached to battalions already in France from their own territorial divisions. That is, Ontario men will be drafted to famous regiments, from military districts, one, two and three, when once they get to Britain and France. All new men will first, however, have some preliminary training in Canada.

The above announcement means that Peterborough men called to the colours under the draft scheme will eventually be sent to reinforce the 2nd and 21st Eastern Ontario Battalions and probably the 4th and 5th C. M.R., in which many Peterborough soldiers have served. They will probably receive their preliminary training in the Eastern Ontario Depot Battalion at Kingston, and then pass through the Eastern Ontario training battalions in England before being drafted to France.

TORONTO, Ont., Sept. 6.— A class for movie operators has been started in the Central Technical School here in connection with the vocational training of the convalescent soldiers, and is inciting great interest among the returned men, as a new means of livelihood.

There is much more to the work than turning a crank and timeing kisses, as one facetious young veteran remarked when he signed up. There is a good deal to be learned about electricity, and the machine itself, as well as the actual running of the apparatus.

The demand for operators is great and increasing, and it is work which many returned men will find profitable as well as agreeable. The salary runs from $20 to $25 a week with union hours.

Sergeant T. E. T. Staton, the medical sergeant on the staff of the Whitby Military Convalescent Hospital, has few peers in patriotic service among men over age in Canada.

Sergeant Station sent four sons to the front, two of them have been killed in action, and contributes all his pay and allowance to the Red Cross Fund.

VORWAERTS STANDS PAT.

LONDON, Sept. 6.—A despatch to the Daily Chronicle from Amsterdam says that as was to be expected Vorwaerts by its first article on President Wilson's reply to the Pope has brought upon itself the fierce wrath of the pan-German press. The Socialist journal sticks to its point of view and emphasizes it.

Italians Captured 1686 More Prisoners

Have Resumed Their Offensive on the Julian Front—Way Is Open For General Cadorna to Drive Wedge Between Austrian Armies

PTE. F. E. JOHNSTON, brother of Mr. Arthur Johnston of the Windsor Hotel, who is officially reported gassed.

COUNTER ATTACKS FAIL

London, Sept. 5.—The Italian official communication received here today, tells of the resumption of the battle along the Julian front and the capture of an Austrian position on the Bainsizza plateau south of Ocroglo. In addition 86 officers and 1,600 men were made prisoners.

Unofficial despatches from various sources state that the "Austrian position" referred to in the official statement is Monte San Gabriele and there seems little reason to question these despatches. The Italians are now in possessin of the entire chain of hills dominating the Gorzia area. Monte San Gabriele, in fact, has been virtually at the mercy of the Italians since the fall of Monte Santo, its neighboring stronghold. Now that they have taken it the way seems clear for General Cadorna to complete his domination of the Bainsizza plateau and push on into the Chiapovano valley, driving a wedge in between the Austrian northern and southern armies on the Isonzo front and severing their lines of communication with each other.

The last stand of the Austrians at Monte San Gabriele, according to the despatches received to-day, was on the north-east side of the mountain. The Cologne Gazette says the Austrians abandoned their strongest fortifications and that the complete loss of the mountain means the retreat of the whole Austrian army on front.

General Cadorna, the despatches said, celebrated his 70th birthday by pressing the attack and consolidating the positions already won. Italian military critics, commenting on the situation, say that the progress of their army was somewhat hindered by the necessity of constructing new roads up the mountain side and providing motor power. The positions taken are being heavily fortified.

When the Italians have fought their way through the mountains as it seems probable they shortly will, they will have a level stretch of plain of 35 miles between them and Lubiana; if the drive reaches this town, the way is open towards Vienna and the Italians are predicting that nothing can stop them from cutting Austria out of the war except a lack of supplies. It was pointed out to-day that the line from the Swiss frontier to Trieste was 400 miles long, a more extended front than that in Belgium and France. The Italians also had the 400 miles from Venice to Brindisi to defend.

The Rome War Office statement reads:

"Yesterday the battle on the Julian front was violently renewed. On the Bainsizza plateau we obtained advantages, capturing an important position south west of Ocroglo. The battle is now raging north east of Gorizia.

"e captured to-day 86 officers and 1600 men belonging to ten different regiments.

"We captured to-day 86 officers and my after most violent bombardment, launched infantry forces against our positions from Castagnavizza to the sea. On the northern section of the line between Castagnavizza and Korite, the attack after varying fortunes, was repulsed. In the centre, between Koriet and Celle, our troops gallantly resisted four furious assaults and maintained their positions.

"To the south between the Brstov-

PAYING LESS FOR BREAD AND FLOUR THAN IN AMERICA

Government Control and Aid Make It Possible to Sell a Four Pound Loaf of Bread in England at Maximum Price of Eighteen Cents

LORD RHONDDA'S STATEMENT

Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

(By Lowell Mellett, U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

LONDON, Sept, 6, 1917.— Although dependent upon the United States and Canada for wheat, the people of England are paying less for their bread and flour than are Americans and Canadians. Through government control and government aid the bakers can make a reasonable profit, was the explanation given the United Press by Lord Rhondda, Food Controller of the British Empire to-day. From September 17, England expects to spend $200,000,000 annually to keep bread and flour prices reasonable.

"The British government has controlled the entire imported wheat trade since last October," Lord Rhondda said, "and since that time has sold it practically at cost, representing the price as averaged over purchases during the last eleven months. That price is considerably lower than the present market price apart from the normal peace time difference in prices between England and America. This probably explains why it is that bread and flour are sold here at lower prices than in the United States.

"I understand wheat has not yet been purchased on the American government's account, therefore American bread is doubtless selling at a price corresponding with the present wheat quotation. When the British Wheat Commission commenced operations this price was $1.95 a bushel. To-day it is $2.20.

"We have practically come to an end of the benefits derived from large government advance purchases in the past with the result that the State now steps in to provide bread at a price within the means of our poorer classes. This State aid takes the form of a subsidy. As a result we will supply our millers at a price enabling them to provide the baker after September 17 with flour, from which a four pound loaf can be made and sold over the counter for a maximum price of 18 cents, and the baker will make a reasonable profit."

From other sources in the Food Control Department to-day it was estimated that the government subsidy mentioned by Lord Rhondda to preserve bread and flour prices will total $200,000,000 a year. Other maximum prices fixed as effective after September 17 are: One pound loaf five cents, two pounds, nine cents. These prices are an average reduction of 25 per cent. over the present rates.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

THURSDAY, SEPT. 6, 1917

A NATIONAL BENEFIT.

Canada is doing her work nobly in the war fields; and at the same time much accomplishment, in spite of war conditions, is being reached at home. In spite of the war, and thanks to Providence and the popular spirit of willingness for service, and in spite of many obstacles in the form of labour shortage and otherwise, we have the greatest and most generally distributed production of crops in our history.

Now the Canadian press has in this war stress worked out a signal accomplishment—a national news service, by which every section of Canada east and west and central, from coast to coast is included in a comprehensive telegraph news service, with which the Examiner is connected, and of which our readers will get the benefit in an improved news service. Those regions heretofore physically isolated are now physically connected by wires working day and night.

The importance of the Canadian News Service, under the Canadian Press, Limited, can hardly be estimated and adds another to the many benefits for which the country is indebted to the press. The services of the press to a country are apt to be under-estimated. They may be intangible and subject to no statistical tabulation of results, but are none the less real. Isolation is the foe to solidarity of sentiment and to common aim in a community or country; and anything that eliminates isolation is productive of better citizenship; anything that contributes to greater national or social approach and unity, whether it be cheap postage and effective postal service or good highways or effective and comprehensive news service, represents service in the national interests.

At this stage of the International baseball series, Toronto being a few points ahead, is simply "a tempting of Providence."

A Nova Scotia member of Parliament, moved to have a vote for a new wharf in his constituency struck out, on the score of war-time conditions. He should be provided with either wings or a straight-jacket.

A BRIGHT SPOT.

Lieut. W. P. Carroll, M.P., for Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, has broken new ground—established a stupendous precedent in a Canadian Parliament. When the estimates for rivers and harbours in Nova Scotia, were under consideration, he moved to strike out an item of $2,200 for a wharf, in his constituency. He actually said, as reported in Hansard:

"This is war time, and we should have war time economy. I must say candidly that I think building the wharf at the present time will do no good to anyone. If the appropriation is to be spent, let it be spent on needed repairs to other wharves."

The action of Mr. Carroll is less surprising since he is a Liberal. It derives its chief merit from the principle it involves, and its problematical value as a precedent. As far as the saving of money is concerned it doesn't count much. It doesn't represent a drop in the ocean compared with the millions that have been "chucked about," by and through the government the past three years—the millions annexed by the food and munition profiteers, the fifty or sixty millions juggled with to protect the interests of the big interests in connection with the Canadian Northern Railway et—stab at the credit of the country, the millions wasted on unnecessarily and unprofitably extravagant war expenditure—a maximum of expense for a minimum of suits, such as—one among many—maintaining at high pay, a purely ornamental establishment of idle officers—of the right political persuasion—who did nothing much besides draw their pay, and disgrace their uniforms, and help kill the recruiting spirit.

Mr. Carroll's little $2,200 of saving wouldn't half pay the $5,000 or $6,000 expense of the commission perpetrated to calcimine the genial but begrimed Hon. Bob Rogers. But it is a start—if only a grain of sand to the Sahara desert.

A New York journal argues that it is a mistake to think the war cannot be won without the aid of Uncle Sam's soldiers—but they will be an "all-fired" big help.

FURTHER VENTILATION.

Mr. Frank Carvell, M.P., is on the trail of Hon. Robert Rogers or rather is sharpening his probe into the concoction or commission that "whitewashed" Hon. Robert Rogers. It is a matter that will bear ventilation; and Mr. Carvell who has in turn, practically eliminated from public life the Morines, the Flemmings, the Garlands and the J. Wesley Allisons, is a bad man to have on one's trail. He will likely "get" the Hon. Bob or know the reason why.

The immediate trouble began when a vote was presented in Committee of Supply for $5,500 for part payment of the expenses of the Commission appointed to whitewash Hon. Robert Rogers—appointed by Order-in- Council to reverse the course of justice.

Aside from the questionable propriety and decency of the government interfering with the findings of a tribunal appointed by a provincial government, by order-in-council, it does not seem good government to use the money of the people— to strain the law, and discredit the judiciary of the country, in order to cloak the stains of a besmirched minister, who, if he was aggrieved, had his remedy in appeal to the courts, where justice, and not political exigency, would be a deciding factor.

But the expenditure of public money and the creation of a wicked precedent in interference with the course of justice, are less excusable in view of the fact that both were wasted or unwarranted and unjustifiable.

Promptly on Mr. Rogers' "whitewashing" to make him clean cabinet company, he turns and rends his benefactors — the perfunctorily purged minister, denounces his leader for "inactivity and indecision" and retires in simulated or real disgust, from the cabinet, for which he had been made outwardly clear at a cost of $5,500, a clean case of wasted whitewash.

Very many will say "hear hear" to Hon. Robert Rogers' declaration that the Borden government is guilty of "inactivity and indecision"—in war administration.

UNFAIR CRITICISM.

There is often a good deal of criticism of Canadian officers, in England who "could not see their way clear to cross the ChCannel"; that is get into the fighting zone. This should not be taken to include all such officers. There are many exceptions. A Toronto lady, a mother, writes to the press to explain the difficulty that Canadians have in getting to active service in France. One of her sons threw up his commission in a Canadian battalion and enlisted as a private to get overseas at once. He soon became sergeant. He was one of three hundred picked men sent overseas in 1915. He ranked high as a sniper bomber, and three times was ordered to Flanders, only to be recalled just before starting—in one case only an hour. He is now quartermaster sergeant and "to his great disgust is still in camp in England." Another son, threw up the position of city engineer in a British Columbia city, got a commission and raised a company and was sent to England, in charge of that and other units. He is working hard in England, but can get no doctor to pass him.

These examples are doubtless a type of many of the obstacles that prevent officers in England getting into the fight. And we dont know what other hindrances may be interposed, but if the muddle in the Canadian military hospital administration is significant of similar muddle and favouritism and futility in military matters, there consists a good deal of the explanation of Canadian officers not getting a chance, and gives rise to a good deal of thoughtless jeering at officers who are still kicking their heels about England or have returned home to meet unmerited reproach and cheap sneers at their courage and patriotism. Official muddle and favouritism have done much to discourage recruiting, and obstruct some officers from getting a chance for active service.

The British food controller hasn't the fear of Hanna before his eyes. He keeps on fixing food prices.

CHICAGO, Sept. 6.—Dr. G. R. Parkin, of London, England, organizing secretary of Rhodes Scholarship Trust, to-day announced that all elections to scholarships in the United States and Canada have been indefinitely postponed because of the war.

Comments Of London Press On The Perfidy Of The Kaiser

Petrograd Palace Secrets Outstanding Feature of the News in British Metropolis

LONDON, Sept. 5.—The New York Herald's sensational disclosure of amazing secrets from the Czar's palace in connection with the Kaiser's plot against Britain in 1904 is the outstanding feature of the news in the London newspapers, all of which publish full reports of the Herald's despatches, also long editorials. The Times says:

"The documents which the Herald makes public convict the Kaiser of planning a great European coalition against Britain while pretending to be a friend, and being base enough to suppose that Britain's real friend, France, then actually debating ratification of the Entente, would stoop to be an accomplice of his perfidy."

"What," asks the Times, "is to be thought of the character of a man capable of perfidies such as these? Who can trust his honour and good faith? Yet it is on these rotten, shattered foundations that the peace fanatics would have us build the future safety of the world."

The Daily Telegraph says: "It is a most striking and fortunate coincidence—if it be a simple coincidence—which has brought about the publication of the latest evidence of the Kaiser's diplomacy within a few days of the appearance of President Wilson's reply to the Vatican peace note. It would be hard to imagine a more telling illustration of the sort of State action that President Wilson was referring to than we now have presented to us in the disclosures made through the European edition of the New York Herald."

The Morning Post sees one touch in the Kaiser's telegrams that is unforgettable. It quotes his despatch to the Czar, reminding the latter not to forget to order new ships in Germany, and says:

"This glimpse of the Imperial bagman pushing his wares is exquisitely characteristic. It is not every director of high State policy who can attempt to rearrange the European balance of power by cajoling one Government, tricking another, checkmating a third and at the same time obtain a profitable business order. No wonder William II. insisted on being his own Chancellor."

The Westminster Gazette says:

"Whether these disclosures will penetrate Germany we do not know, but it is difficult to believe that if the Germans are really a civilized people they will not revolt against the mortification of being thus at the mercy of 'Willy' and 'Nicky'!"

Local Company Well Represented At Convention

Six Members of J. M. Greene Music Company Heard Tone Test

On Tuesday and Wednesday of this week an Edison dealers' convention was held in Toronto. Mr William Maxwell of New York, Vice-President of the Edison Company, was present. On Tuesday a tone test recital was held, when Christine Miller, the great soprano, sang in unison with her own voice on an Edison Diamond Disc instrument in Foresters' Hall. A banquet was tendered to the delegates by the R. S. Williams' Music Co.

The J. M. Greene Music Company of this city had six representatives at the convention. They were Miss Goodsell of Belleville, Mr. Mason, manager of the Lindsay branch, J. W. Hales, R. S. Mason of this city, John Morden, mechanical supervisor, and Miss G. LeBarr, who was recently appointed manager of the Edison department in this city and who read a paper at the convention by Mr. Greene, entitled, "The Responsibilities of an Edison Dealer."

GIRL GUIDES, NOT TROOPS.

Not a Single Soldier on Guard Outside British War Office.

Probably there is no other War Office like the Imperial one in the world, at least, in one respect—there is not a soldier on guard either outside or inside the whole building.

The task of keeping order is left entirely in the hands of the Metropolitan policemen. Every stranger who enters is asked his business by a constable, fills in an inquiry form under the guidance of a constable, and, when he leaves, delivers that form, which serves him as a pass up to another constable. If he requires direction inside he is put in charge of a little girl apparently fresh from school, who takes him to the room he requires. Her only mark of officialdom is a brown overall with a small crown on each point of the collar.

WAS NOT A CASE OF RABIES

Dog Was Afflicted With Paralysis of the Spine

At Monday night's meeting of the City Council it was reported to the aldermen that a dog owned by Albert Watkins, 148 Park street, had to be destroyed due, it was alleged, to a case of rabies. This report was the chief cause of the Council's action in deferring the matter of raising the dog quarantine. It has since developed that the dog in question suffered from paralysis of the spine and was in no way inclined to rabies. The animal was a valuable one, and only a short time ago the owner refused twenty-five dollars for the dog. The cause was first reported to the police as a rabies, but Dr. Johnston, the veterinary, who was called in, pronounced it as a bad case of paralysis due, it is said, to infection from another dog.

Zapata.

When it is considered that Zapata is a half-breed Indian, scarcely able to read and write, it must be admitted that he is somewhat of a philosopher. I believe that this peon chieftain is the one leader in Mexico who has no ambitions to be a dictator of his country. As long as he can rule his native state and keep the landlords out he is content. He sees only one thing—the land question; but he sees that very clearly. His "Plan of Ayala," as far as it applies to the common ownership of land, has worked. At least it has worked to the satisfaction of the poor laborers.

Carranza is still carrying on war against him, but Zapata is holding his own. His army is an elastic one. At times it shrinks to a few thousand men, when the peons go back to till their fields. When a campaign is begun his forces swell to many thousands.

One thing is sure. He can get as many recruits as he has guns.

Whatever the solution of the Mexican problem may be, Zapata and his half million loyal followers must be considered. He will quit fighting only when his "Plan of Ayala" is made part of the law of the nation.

Of all the insurgent leaders who have battled for supremacy the last six years in Mexico, he is the one chief who has remained true to his followers. His peons know what they are fighting for. They are battling for land and Don Emiliano Zapata.

A MEMORY OF EARL GREY

AN interesting point has never yet been decided as to the permanent name to be given to the pass which leads over the Purcell Range between Lake Windermere and Argenta on the Upper Kootenay Lake. The late Earl Grey, who had a hunting cabin half way up the pass on Toby Creek crossed the pass on one occasion, with the result that the geographers named it after him. The original discoverer of the pass, however, was a prospector named Wells, and Earl Grey, who was always a thorough sportsman, wrote saying that he thought it a hardship to deprive Wells of the right to the old name of Wells Pass. To-day, however, the name of Earl Grey's Pass is still current, and remains in most of the maps. The British Columbia Government commenced to build a road over it, which, however, was badly damaged in the great washouts of 1915. This summer two venturesome tourists made the crossing though at considerable hardship owing to the condition of the trail at Hammill Creek, on the western side. The following account of the trip appeared in the "Kootenian," of Kaslo, B.C.:

"After a trip that they will not forget in a hurry, Dr. R. N. Carter of Rossland, and Henry Cody of this city arrived in town on Wednesday of last week, after a somewhat dangerous jaunt across Earl Grey's Pass, and through Hammill Creek canyon. They had left Wilmer, in East Kootenay, about ten days before and made their way up the Toby Creek wagon road to the summit, and put in about one day exploring the huge Toby Creek ice field. Mr. Cody was well acquainted with the country up there, having mineral claims on the East Kootenay side, upon which he has been doing assessment work for years. The ground was not new to him, but it was virgin territory to the doctor. The latter stated that he had never before seen such magnificent mountain scenery. Having travelled a good deal over the surface of the globe, he is in a pretty good position to judge as to what constitute the real thing in the line of mountain scenery.

"He found the Toby Creek glacier a particular inspiring and wonderful spectacle. They spent a day on top of this huge lake of ice, and only had a look over one corner of it. They started out in the early morning to promenade upon it, and walked for four hours steady, the going being rather good except for working around some of the crevasses, and in the four hours' stroll arrived at the conclusion that they had not gone half way across it. So they returned to the camp. Beyond the risk of falling off a precipice or looping the loop down the side of a mountain, there was not a great deal of danger to the trip until they worked their way down on this side of the pass and began to come down Hammill Creek. The trip from the pass down was made in a driving rain, with the bushes soused with water, so that they were soaking wet in a few minutes after leaving the timber line. The trail in places was so overgrown that it could scarcely be followed. A number of new slides had come down lately and piled the bottom of the valley with various debris, so that progress was at times necessarily slow. They managed to get through to the Argenta Mines compressor building and camped at that point over night. The following day was one of hardship, and extreme peril at times. Between the point on the Hammill Creek road where the trail to the St. Patrick group branches off, and the Argenta Mines compressor, all semblance of a road was wiped out entirely in places through the depths of the fiercely savage Hammill Creek canyon. Several times they had to improvise bridges to cross the roaring stream, said bridges being nothing but a convenient tree, which was felled with an axe. As Hammill Creek varies all the way from forty to eighty feet wide, and as the fallen trees sometimes sagged down into the teeming torrent, the peril of such crossings can be better imagined than described, more particularly in view of the fact that both men had heavy packs on their backs, that of Cody's weighing some sixty-five pounds.

"At last, however, they gained the point on the canyon road where the trail branches off to the St. Patrick group, and from there on, comparatively speaking, the going was like unto that of a paved street. In due time they reached Argenta, and from that point were rowed over to Lardo, where they connected with the barge "Empress" and came to town."

Westerners Are Fighting New Freight Rates

Railways Will Have to Justify Their Increases at a Hearing of Railway Commission

Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 6, 1917. — The fight made by the Western Boards of Trade, including those of Winnipeg, Calgary and Regina, against an advance by railways in freight rates between Eastern and Western Canada has resulted in the granting by the Railway Commission of a hearing at Ottawa on Tuesday next, at which the railways will be required to justify their advances in rates. The proposed increase in rates ranges from one cent on tenth class matter to six cents on first class matter.

Inaccurate information about the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company is causing the company much inconvenience, Wilford Phillips, the manager, declared to-day. He said articles which appeared in Toronto financial publications have placed the railway in a difficult position. According to one Toronto weekly 1,000 jitneys are operating on the streets of Winnipeg and the company will not only lose millions of dollars in receipts during the year, but will be forced to suspend operations. Phillips denied these allegations. He said about half that number of jitneys are carrying passengers and that the year's receipts will be cut by about $385,000 instead of a million.

Keeping The I.W.W. Leaders Out Of Canada

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 6.— The Dominion's immigration officials have succeeded in their fight to keep the I.W.W. agitators south of the international border. J. Bruce Walker, Commissioner of Immigration, stated to-day that since the arrest and conviction of the first six men who made their way into the western harvest fields, there has been no trouble. Constant vigilance on the part of the border officials has made it impossible for others to get into the country, although many have tried.

CAUGHT "U" BOAT NAPPING.

British Captain Decoyed Pirate Within Easy Range Then Sank It.

A cleverly executed ruse by the captain of a British steamer in conjunction with two members of the gun crew sent one of the Kaiser's U-boats to the bottom of the sea, according to the captain of a steamer arriving at a Gulf port.

The submarine opened fire with long range guns out of danger of the steamer's fire. The captain, noting that he had no chance to win in an open fight, resorted to a trap. He ordered all hands into the boats, save two members of the gun crew, who were left behind with instructions to hide.

The submarine commander fell into the trap. He ceased firing and made for the steamer, presumably to obtain supplies and complete the work of destruction by a cheaper and more certain method. The gunners waited until certain of a hit, and then leaped out and trained their weapon on the submarine. The fire was accurate, and the U-boat sank within a few minutes.

WEDDING BELLS.

The marriage took place on Saturday, September 1st, at High Noon at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Zene Rylatt, Victoria, when Alva May, daughter of Mrs. Garneau, Trent River became the bride of Mr. Harry Pollock, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Pollock, also of Trent River.

The marriage service took place in the Victoria Methodist Church at 12 o'clock noon. The young couple were attended by the bride's sister and Mr. Roy Scott of Trent Bridge.

After the service the guests numbering about sixty drove to the home of Mrs. Zene Rylatt, here an elaborate dinner as partaken of.

The young couple left on the early morning train for Toronto and points west on their wedding tour and on their return will reside in Havelock. The bride has resided in Toronto the past few years, while the groom is a popular C.P.R. fireman.

The many beautiful presents received testify to the high esteem by which they are held.

OBITUARY.

The sympathy of the citizens is extended to Mrs. Mac Foley in the sudden death of her eldest son, Francis, age 3 years, who passed away on Monday following an operation. The father of the child is overseas and this makes it much harder for the mother to bear.

The funeral takes place on Wednesday, service being held in Our Lady of Mt. Carmel church and thence to the Roman Catholic cemetery for burial.

THE EVENING EXAMINER is sold to the NEWSBOY AT ONE CENT a copy. He sells it for TWO CENTS. In this way he doubles his money. By getting regular customers he delivers it to them at ten cents a week, and makes FOUR CENTS A WEEK ON EACH CUSTOMER. There are quite a number of newsboys delivering THE EXAMINER to customers who make as high as $2.50 A WEEK, and all done after school, in addition to the profit that is made by selling the papers. The Examiner is giving NINETY-FIVE DOLLARS IN CASH PRIZES to the boys who secure the most customers for themselves between MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10TH AND NOVEMBER 1ST NEXT, JUST NINE WEEKS. It does not make any difference whether you have one customer or fifty customers on Monday next, it is the boys who get the greatest number of new customers that win the prizes. Supposing you did not have any customers when you started, and at the end of the contest you had fifteen, another boy had fifty when the contest started, and at the end he had sixty-four, this boy would have only got fourteen new customers. And the first boy would win the prize because he had fifteen new customers to take The Examiner while the other boy had only fourteen. CASH PRIZES will be given to the boys who secure the GREATEST NUMBER OF NEW CUSTOMERS FOR THEMSELVES AS FOLLOWS:

BOYS! Make up YOUR MINDS to Enter the Contest on MONDAY Next

It is easy to sell THE EXAMINER. It is the legitimate business of the newsboy to sell papers, and if you are polite in your canvassing for new customers all your friends and even strangers will be glad to help you.

It is fine experience for any boy or girl, and as there are quite a few girls who are now distributing THE EXAMINER they are ELIGIBLE TO ENTER THE CONTEST.

Mothers and fathers talk this matter over with your boys and girls. It is a good business training. There are hundreds of young men successful in business in the City and elsewhere who have at some time in their earlier days been Examiner newsboys.

SELL ONLY THE EXAMINER. Get your friends to try it for a few weeks and you will find they will be regular customers, and remember a gain of a few new customers each week may win you the $25.00 PRIZE. If there is anything you DO NOT UNDERSTAND drop into THE EXAMINER OFFICE this week and it will be explained to you.

The only condition is that Each Boy or Girl must buy their own Papers and no Prizes will be awarded to a boy who buys another boys papers and put them in as his own.

IN ADDITION THERE WILL BE A

WEEKLY CASH PRIZE OF $1.00

Which will be paid EVERY MONDAY to the NEWSBOY or GIRL who makes the BIGGEST GAIN DURING EACH WEEK. A boy can be earning all the time, he has the profit on his customers, he may win the Weekly Prize of a $1.00 and he also has the opportunity of winning One of the Big Cash Prizes, the largest of which is $25.00.

MUSIC IN THE HOME

POTPOURRI.

Could this happen in Canada? It is said that a few years ago in Paris a man bought two tickets for a performance at one of the theatres and it transpired that the seats were so badly placed that it was impossible for him to get more than a glimpse of the stage. The management was sued and the judge not only ordered a refund of the price of the tickets, but added a fine of $3 on the ground that the purchaser was not informed that he could not see from the seats he bought, while furthermore, there were plenty of good seats vacant at the performance in question.

Setting a game of tennis to music is one of the accomplishments credited to Debussy. This work was a dance-pantomime written for a Russian dancer. The Canadian who will set a game of baseball or golf to music will have his name heralded in every corner of the world.

A clerk in Manchester, England, has this record: he played 1,400 tunes on the piano from memory in sixteen hours, after which he fell off the piano-seat, having exhausted his strength and his repertoire. Poor fellow! And his audience, poor, poor fellows!

The present war recalls a story of the invasion of Italy in 1814. At the foot of the Apennines was situated a small village, poor and almost unknown, but it became the scene of pillage and bloodshed. Fearing the soldiers, the women and children took refuge in the church. Some soldiers, however, forced their way into the sacred retreat, killing some of the refugees. There was one woman more courageous than the rest, who climbed the narrow staircase that led to the belfry and there with her helpless child crouched through the long night of terror. That woman was the mother of the great Verdi, who afterwards became the composer of thirty operas, the idol of Italy, and famed throughout the world.

The presence of United States soldiers in Canada adds interest to what is already an interesting paragraph from an old copy of the Boston Post dated July 24, 1858. This implies the suggestion that Yankee Doodle may be a Hungarian or at least a European melody:—"Kossuth informed us that the Hungarians with him in this country first heard "Yankee Doodle" on the Mississippi River, when they immediately recognized it as one of the old airs of their native land—one played in the dances of that country — and they began immediately to caper and to dance as they used to in Hungary. It is curious that the same air should be found in old Biscay. It has been stated, we know not upon what authority, that the air of "Yankee Doodle" is the same as that of "Lucy Locket," and is as old as the time of Cromwell, when it was called "Nankee Doodle." In the time of the old French war (1755), when the New England troops, commanded by Governor Shirley, were encamped with the regular British troops on the Hudson, near Albany, Dr. Shacksburg, a surgeon of the British army, remodeled the old tune and called it "Yankee Doodle" as a joke in derision of the New England volunteers, who admired the tune; and it soon became a general favourite throughout the American camp. It was suggested, it is said, by the quaint and ludicrous appearance of the American volunteers as they came into camp—some in black suits, some in blue, and some in grey. Some had long coats, some short ones, and some had no coats at all. Some of them had long hair, some short, and some wore enormous wigs. With a great variety of accoutrements, they furnished altogether a good deal of sport for the regular British troops."

MUSIC AND WHISKERS.

Under this heading a musical writer of New York calls attention to the variety of facial adornments affected by some of the more prominent composers. First of all he mentions Brahms, a very Nazarite whose vow persisted till the last. His beard and moustache were luxuriant. Mendelssohn wrote brilliantly despite his side whiskers. The article proceeds: Chopin is shown with a band of whiskerette. Gounod, Saint Saens, Bizet, Dvorak and Schumann had whiskers that hid their neckwear. Weber and Schubert wore patches of hair in front of their ears, while Grieg and others were content with a moustache. Clean shaven musicianship is not uncommon. From observation, careful and long continued, the New York authority reaches the conclusion that music and whiskers are not inter-related; that is to say, that music does not induce whiskers, and whiskers do not necessarily produce music, despite the Aeolian harp effect they may produce in a high wind.

When we come to hair, what a collection of mops could be cited! Grieg, it is generally believed, combed his only on his birthday. Beethoven never combed his at all, and Liszt must have been perpetually combing in order to produce that wonderful Dutch-cut, silky effect, which makes his portraits so striking. As for the performers let us dwell for a moment upon the portraits of Paderewski and Percy Grainger. Let us consider the long, sable, straight locks of Mark Hambourg or Ysaye. Half of this sort must be temperamental, it is so different from that grown by the ordinary citizen.

THE MUSICAL SIDE OF LIFE IN THE YUKON.

Since '98 the Sourdoughs of the Yukon Have Had Many Musical Treats.

The press furnishes us regularly with records of the musical doings in the various Canadian centres and abroad, but it is not often that news filters through of the musical happenings in far-off Yukon. Writing to a friend in the East, a resident of Dawson City, after describing the vegetation, and the days of warm sunshine in that country, also a land of the midnight sun, adds: It is in the long dark days of winter that the sun for six weeks never rises over the horizon and then for many days merely peeps over the crest of the mountain, it is in these days when the Aurora Borealis crinkles overhead and the thermometer stands at 60 below zero or lower, that we gather around the fireside and music is the solace of our leisure hours.

Since the days of 1898 and 1899 music has always held a large place in our lives here, and musicians and vocalists of a high order have been in our midst. In 1901 the Presbyterian church installed a splendid two-manual concert organ, run by electric motor, and costing in all in the neighbourhood of $12,000 and capable organists have always been available. And one indeed was a brilliant pupil of Edwin Lemare and Xavier Scharwenka.

In the seasons of 1901 and 1902 an amateur opera company with a chorus of 50 to 75 voices, the principal parts too, being taken by clever amateurs, put on the following operas: Pinafore, Mikado, Pirates of Penzance, Bohemian Girl, Erminie. The following years saw the Chimes of Normandy, Trial by Jury and the operetta Beans and Buttons. Once we had a visit from a noted English pianist who gave two recitals. And there has been a succession of good concerts that would have done credit to many large outside cities. There have also been many interesting recitals of talented students.

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

To many people, not musicians, the symphony orchestra and its constitution are not rightly understood. Even to many musicians, competent amateurs who have little occasion to visit the largest cities the orchestra is not without mystery. If the illuminati are too proud to consider Rudiments, let them skip this brief and sententious paragraph. It is not intended for them.

The modern Symphony orchestra has instruments of four main classes, strings, wood-wind, brass, and percussion. Each of these classes is subdivided, but the general tone-quality of each class is distinctive and peculiar. The string family comprises the violin, the viola, the violoncello, the bass viol and the harp. Frequently they are in the following relative proportions: 10 first violins, 10 second violins, playing what choristers call the alto part, 6 violas, 6 'cellos and 6 basses. The harp is an occasional instrument and only at rare intervals does a composer require more than one. The pianoforte has no orchestral standing, except when it is used as solo instrument in a concerto, the orchestra being in accompaniment. We think of the strings as the backbone of the band, just as the pipasons are the backbone of a pipe organ. They are instruments of infinite possibilities in expression and in such combination have a passionate fervor which is thrilling.

The wood-wind includes generally 2 flutes, sometimes a piccolo, played by one of the flautists, 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, an English horn, and 2, sometimes 3 bassoons. The combination without the strings is not impressive, but with them gives a delicacy of colour that is most beautiful. The brass includes 2 trumpets, 4 French horns, (playing the complete harmonies) 2 or 3 trombones and the deep bass tuba. Besides we have a variety of percussion instruments beginning with triangle and glockenspeil and including tympani, cymbals and bass drum.

With such a combination, giving all possible musical colours, a composer is like an oil painter with his palette fully provided. All possibilities for emotional expression are in his hands. For this reason the greatest works of the masters are orchestral works, and the musician who neglects the wonders of orchestration is only partially educated. It seems unfortunate that the expense of maintaining such an organization is comparable only with the annual outlay on a large steam yacht, but the man of fortune desiring to use his money for public as well as private advantage would make no error in choosing the orchestra rather than the yacht. Col. Higginson of Boston made this decision, and many thousands of his fellow citizens have risen to call him blessed.

Light And Food In Factory And Home Discussed

Factory Inspector Burke Suggests Improvements in Address at Typographical Conference

Food in its relation to labour was one of the interesting topics discussed by Factory Inspector James T. Burke, of Toronto at the last annual conference of the Ontario Typographical Unions.

Moulders, stenographers, blacksmiths, clerks, printers, etc., all eating the same food did not work out satisfactorily. Diet had considerable to do with a man's occupation. The human body required so many food calories, or heat units, per day. Thus a moulder or blacksmith, doing heavy manual labour, would require more calories than a clerk or a printer, thereby demonstating that the same articles of diet for all workers were not advisable.

In England there was a bill-of-fare for all classes of workers. Chemists, from practical analysis, find out what foods are best suited to various workmen.

The manufacturers would find a practical chemist very useful. Bills of fare should be taken into every home, in order that foods may be selected which have the greatest productive capacity, and at the same time lower the High Cost of Living.

This question is occupying the attention of the Superintendent of the Trades and Labour Branch of the Department of Public Works in Ontario, and the chemist of the Factory Inspection Branch.

ILLUMINATION.

Speaking on the subject of illumination Mr. Burke said that in natural illumination with opportunity for sunlight effects, green may be more desirable, but a light buff has been found the most satisfactory of all for rooms in artificial light, as by its colour it tends to eye comfort. Walls should never have a glossy surface, as the sheen or reflection is trying to the eyes; even that coming from the pages of a book will produce eyestrain in time. Such a light buff reflects fifty per cent. of the light it receives. An ideal combination of colours for a study is a white ceiling and a buff wall, giving bright surroundings and no violent contrasts.

Colours have a great effect on apparent distances; for instance, a red room appears smaller than if it were coloured blue; it seems to bring objects closer together, and artists often make use of this fact, by using red to make portions of a picture stand out from the canvas.

No reds or blues should be used in tinting the walls of any room intended for study, as both colours are trying to the eyes. In artificial illumination yellow seems to please the eye more than green.

Since a sidelight is very injurious and its absence is necessary for comfort, all light fixtures should be on or suspended from the ceiling and should be out of the line of the ordinary field of vision; if this is attained, the requirement for very low intensity becomes less important.

Lamps in dwelling houses should be hung at a distance of not less than eight feet from the floor where diffusive shades are used, and where the semi-direct system, which utilizes a dense opal glass globe or bowl, is in operation, it is generally suspended about three feet below a white ceiling upon which much the larger proportion of light is thrown for reflection.

As has been said, a side light is undesirable, therefore desk-lamps are not to be recommended. A safe rule to observe is that the angle made by the line from the lamp to the eye with the line from the eye to work on a desk, should not be less than thirty degrees of a circle.

Bright lights hung too low, or even incandescent lamps suspended within the range of vision and left unshaded, all tend to produce "retinall asthenopia," as it is termed, and the only way to avoid the trouble is to have the lamps properly shaded, the light properly diffused, and of an intensity adapted to the work to be done.

Perhaps it would not be out of place to explain the means by which it is usual to define the difference between the quantity of light from a given source and the intensity of the resulting illumination. The standard used is supposed to be the quantity of light emitted from a spermaceti candle seven-eighths of an inch in diameter, when burning at the rate of 120 grains per hour. The intensity of the resulting illumination is measured in "foot-candles"—a foot-candle being the intensity of the illumination that a one-candle power source yields at the distance of one foot. This intensity gets less in proportion to the increase in the square of the distance which separates the source from the object illuminated. For example, to get the same illumination given by a standard candle at a distance of one foot, on an object situated five feet away, would require a lamp having a power of twenty-five foot-candles.

A good maxim to bear in mind is that "A dark shop is a dangerous one," and it has been stated that ten per cent. of accidents in factories are caused by poor lighting. Good light is a paying investment, and the experience of a large number of plants reveals the fact that on an average it does not cost more than one cent a day to furnish enough light for each man who is earning two dolalrs for that period.

There should be enough light provided to prevent the slightest amount of eyestrain. It has been computed that there should be at least one-fourth of a candle-power for each square foot of floor space for a lamp hung ten feet from the floor, or for a warehouse one-eighth of a candle-power is considered sufficient.

Sudden change from a strong light to one of less intensity causes the eye to become temporarily unable to perform its functons, owing to the retina becoming what we may called fatigued and the dilation of the pupil of the eye having a tendency to develop a strain. It is when the strong light falls on the central portion of the retina that contraction occurs.

When the eye is turned to the weaker rays the pupil quickly dilates, thus causing the fatigue and producing the effect of semi-blindness; and the man affected would be unable to take note of any object in the darker region, so becoming particularly liable to get injured. If, for instance, a workman is working on some object from which a strong light is reflected, and for some reason he wishes to leave the room, or is reaching for a tool, the strong glare from his work has caused him to become incapable of seeing clearly, so much so that he must either remain still until the effect passes off, or run the risk of injury from the moving parts of machinery which are not distinguishable to his sight.

It may be advisable to state exactly what is meant by "retina." This is the term used by opticians to denote the sensitive lining or curtain at the back of the eye, and upon which the lens of the eye throws a sharp image of the external objects toward which the eye is directed. The optic nerve takes note of this and in its turn transmits the impression to the brain.

The retina is very sensitive to light, and the workman who receives a sudden flash involuntarily turns his eyes away to escape the effects; but the man who is using a local light has no sudden glare to warn him of trouble, and as a consequence, the gradual reduction of eye efficiency due to the strain on the sensitive retina, has the effect through the automatic and unrealised efforts of the eye-muscles to exclude the excessive light, of making him practically blind, with the result just mentioned, of a possible serious accident.

War Souvenirs Are Wanted By The G. W. V. A.

You Can Assist the Veterans in Making Exhibit a Success.

In addition to the model trench, which the Great War Veterans are to show at the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition the Veterans will also make an exhibit of war souvenirs and to ensure the success of this, they are asking the co-operation of the public. The Veterans themselves have a large number of souvenirs and in order to make the exhibit complete they would like to secure the loan of others. In many households in Peterborough there are interesting war relics which would be valuable additions to those already secured by the Veterans.

If you are willing to lend the souvenirs you will please notify Secretary T. R. Cooper, care of G.W.V.A., Barrie Building. They will be closely guarded and taken care of during the exhibition.

Press On Fixing Of Wheat Prices

WILL STIMULATE PRODUCTION

Boston Globe:—"The price of the 1917 wheat crop has been fixed at $2.20 a bushel at Chicago for No. 1 northern spring wheat. In setting this figure the President and his advisers have had more in mind than the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. They have set a figure which in their judgment will stimulate production."

PUBLIC SHOULD BENEFIT.

Norfolk Virginian Pilot:—"Two dollars and twenty cents a bushel is considerably below the high figures reached during the recent period of speculation and profiteering on the part of the large brokers and dealers, and, with the market stabilised at that figure, should mean an appreciable reduction in the cost of flour, from which the consuming public should benefit."

HOUSEWIFE WILL BENEFIT LITTLE.

Brooklyn Eagle:—"The housewife will benefit little, if at all, in reduction of present flour prices, but she will be guarded against a further increase unless conditions change. And that is something, considering all the world conditions."

NECESSITY IS OBVIOUS.

Utica Press:—"The necessity for this important piece of legislation is obvious to any one at all familiar with the facts. It is necessary, primarily, for reducing the cost of living to the consumer, a class which includes everybody and is worth taking into consideration."

NO CAUSE TO COMPLAIN

Newark Ledger:—"Wheat at $2.20 a bushel, the government price for 1917, would be a high price under normal conditions, but it is practically a dollar less than the price in the Chicago market within the last six months. The producer who is satisfied with a reasonable profit will have no cause to complain, but a howl may be heard from the greedy producer and the speculator, both of whom have been taking advantage of the world's needs and demanding unheard of prices."

DELICACY WAS SEEN.

Springfield Republican:—"Prices are always, under normal conditions, a resultant of the conflicting forces known as supply and demand, but the struggle on the price fixing board only remotely resembled the working of an economic law. The delicacy of this initial performance in its public and social aspects was seen in the fact that the President felt impelled to throw the whole might of his office and personal prestige in support of the board's decision."

ANOTHER ALASKAN TREASURE

Alaska has already returned many times the money which, when paid for it, was declared to have been much worse than wasted, and how it discloses the possession of another treasure equaling, if not surpassing, in value all of those previously taken from the frozen wilds once called worthless by all the Wise Ones. For platinum has been found there—platinum, the royal metal, to which even gold bows in humility and silver dares not even approach.

The extent of the discovery is not yet determined, but is known to be large, and the deposits are so rich that the chemist to whom the first samples were submitted for analysis didn't have the courage to report on them lest he be thought guilty of a wild exaggeration. And the platinum now in sight is only a beginning, as was the gold in California rivers that caused the epoch-dating "rush" of '49. The real mines are back in the mountains, nobody knows just where. There the serious exploitation of the future will be done, but meanwhile the river sands will pay again Alaska's many times canceled debt.

It must be remembered that platinum is useful as well as beautiful, and that its enormous price is fixed by the practical ends it serves in several most important industries, not by its availability for the purpose of decoration and luxury.—New York Times.

Serbians Robbed Of All Harvests

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Economic conditions in Serbia are deplorable, and are growing worse every day, according to a statement issued by the Serbian Press Bureau in London. The Austrians, Germans and Bulgarians are said to have carried off all of this year's harvest, which is very abundant. The inhabitants have been deprived of foodstuffs, and most families have but one loaf of bread a week. Meat, butter and spices are unobtainable.

There is virtually no milk in Serbia, and children who are dependent on this food are dying by the thousands.

Interned Serbians and prisoners of war in Austria-Hungary and Bulgaria are dying from hunger and various diseases. According to private information, 80,000 have perished in Austria and Hungary.

SIFTON REFUSES TO DISCUSS HIS MISSION

Has Left For the East After a Brief Visit to Winnipeg—Said to Have Been Sent There By Sir Robert Borden.

THE WESTERN SITUATION

Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterboreugh Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 5. — Sir Clifford Sifton, who left for Ottawa yesterday after a brief visit to this city, made no statement regarding the object or success of his visit before leaving. Considerable speculation is rife in political circles as to why he was here. Liberal leaders who have been prominent in party fusion and union government negotiations during the last few weeks disclaim having had conference with him.

Others, however, declare that he came to Winnipeg on a definite mission from Sir Robert Borden and that the mission was accomplished successfully. In this connection they point to the mysterious visit yesterday of Hon. A. B. Hudson, Attorney General of Manitoba, and T. A. Crerar, President of the United Grain Growers, to Regina. It is understood that they were there for a conference with Hon. James A. Calder. The names of these three gentlemen have been mentioned as possible members of a National Government and negotiations with such an end in view have been in progress for weeks. It is now, however, pretty definitely understood that the negotiations are off and that such a coalition will not be effected.

The Union committee appointed by the South Winnipeg Liberals and Conservatives will hold a joint meeting this evening. The meeting will discuss whole Federal political situation and Canadian and western war policy and will see to what extent unanimity prevails. Once this step is taken it is expected that the Union committee will get down to particulars and discuss fusion and an acceptable fusion candidate. Certain prominent Liberals, electors of South Winnipeg, but not members of the joint committees, are agitating in favour of a resolution to be passed by the joint committee endorsing Sir Robert Borden's leadership for the proposed Union government. On this rock fusion may split.

Great stress is being laid on Dr. Halem G. Blaud's statement Tuesday night, when he declared: "It would be infinitely better to endorse Sir Robert's leadership than to have no Union government at all."

It is authoritatively stated by a Liberal leader who is in close touch with all matters pertaining to the Union government negotiations that the name of Hon. A. B. Hudson is no longer being considered in the Union government negotiations. Hudson was at variance with the political ideals of his colleagues in the recent Liberal conference on Union government proposals. He has stated to friends he could not enter the Cabinet with Sir R. L. Borden as leader. One reason is that he considers the Premier is weak in making decisions.

WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS TO MEET ON FRIDAY

Plans Have Been Formulated For the Carrying Out of the Food Controller's Instructions—Co-operation of Women is Desired.

The following letter has been sent out to the presidents of all women's organizations in the city as far as they are listed. As it is possible that the president of some organization of women may have been unintentionally overlooked it is hoped that in such case the president will accept this as an invitation to be present at the meeting referred to below:

Dear Madam: The Dominion Food Controller, Hon. W. J. Hanna, is endeavouring to enlist the cooperation of all Women's Societies in Canada in the cause of thrift and conservation of food.

To this end the Organization of Resources Committee of Ontario called a mass meeting of representative women of Ontario in Toronto, July 23-25, 1917.

As a result of this meeting a Women's Auxiliary to the Organization of Resources Committee was formed.

This Resources Committee, after consultation with its Women's Auxiliary, has now formulated plans for the carrying out of the Food Controller's instructions.

You as president, are requested to attend a meeting on Friday, September 7th, at 3.30 p.m., in the council chamber, to assist in carrying out locally the instructions of the Food Controller.

It is imperative that your society should be represented at this meeting, therefore if unable personally to be present, kindly appoint a capable substitute to act in your place.

Yours faithfully,
J. A. AYLMER,
President Peterborough Branch Organization of Resources Committee.

JOSEPH WEARING,

HOW LIEUT. DON R. MUNRO OF R. F. C. MET HIS DEATH

Former Student of the C. G. E. Test Department Killed in a Flying Accident in England While Testing a New Machine

A few weeks ago the sad news reached this city that Lt. D. R. (Don) Munro, whose home was in Amherst, N. S., and who had been a student in the Test Department, of the C.G.E. for several months previous to enlisting at Ottawa with the Royal Flying Corps, had been killed in a flying accident, but at that time the particulars were not known.

Word has now been received that Lt. Munro met his death on Saturday evening, July 28th, his watch stopping at 7.40. He was testing a new machine, valued at five thousand pounds. It was a fast flyer, which only the best pilots are allowed to fly. It was only the fourth time the machine had been used, and Lt. Munro put it through many severe tests, but in one turn it could not bear the strain and fell at South Carleton, about one-half mile from the Aerodrome, where eight of the officers stood watching the accident. The machine was a total wreck, but Lt. Munro jumped clear of it when he knew it must go. The doctor thought he would be unconscious before he reached the ground.

Lt. Munro was fearless and masterful to the last, and the O .C.., in speaking to a friend of his, after the accident, said: "My best pilot; I cannot tell you how I feel it." One of the pilots said: "I have had my wings three months, but they would not trust me with the machine. He was by far our best pilot." It was the same from all. Another superior officer said: "He was a fine fellow in every way."

Lt. Munro's body was taken to the Great Northern Hospital, Lincoln. He had a military funeral and was buried in a quiet spot by a large old-fashioned church with grounds at the back, on the outskirts of Lincoln. Six officers drew the bier into the church and all the way to the grave, and again six officers lowered the casket. In writing, his friend said "Had he been the O. C. he could not have had more attention or respect." Tears were in the eyes of the men. Another friend said: "I shall never forget it." The flowers were beautiful, among the same being a magnificent wreath from the officers with "R.F.C." worked in the centre; also a large cross from the men, consisting of beautiful flowers of delicate shades. All spoke of the love and esteem they had for him.

A few weeks ago Lt. Munro was asked by the O. C. to remain in England as instructor, but he refused, saying that he wished to go to France where he was to have gone early in August. Every officer ungrudgingly admitted that Lt. Munro was the best and by far the best pilot they had.

HUGGED BABY TO DEATH.

At an inquest at the St. Pancras Coroners' Court in London, it was stated that a mother was feeding her baby when an air raid began, and, being frightened by the explosions she hugged it so closely that she obstructed its breathing.

The infant died from asphyxiation at a hospital soon afterwards.

GERMANY'S REPLY TO THE POPE'S NOTE

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

(By John Grandens, U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

BERLIN, Via London, Sept. 6, 1917. —Germany will tell Pope Benedict the German people want no gain from the war, but only a durable peace, guaranteed by International treaties, according to an authoritative forecast published to-day by Vorwaerts. The Socialist organ added that Germany will hold if her enemies refuse this sort of a peace, and that the fall of Riga "is not to be the last success of German arms."

DOROTHY ALLAN FAREWELL RECITAL

"The Toronto Courier" says of Miss Allan's singing, after having heard her at the Musicale of "the Arts and Letters Club" in that city:

"Miss Allan's voice is of luscious quality in the mezzo-range and lovely in the soprano, clear and white as the notes of a thrush.

"There is an edge to Miss Allan's voice which is almost pure contralto, and it is this surprising range and variety of tone-colour that makes her voice so very effective, her repertoire so extensive, and her style so popular."

"Musical Canada" says: "Miss Dorothy Allan is a young singer who is rapidly making a name in musical circles for herself and Peterborough, from which city she hails.

"In addition to an excellently trained voice of beautiful quality, Miss Allan possesses to a remarkable degree that highest of all gifts in a singer, a fine sense of musical temperament, and it is safe to predict a splendid career for her."

Among the numbers to be sung by Miss Allan at her Recital in the Collegiate Hall on Monday evening, is the splendid and very exacting Aria "O mio Fernando," from Donnizetti's Grand Opera "La Favorita." This Aria is both a great vocal and physical test of a singer's ability.

The programme is one of the finest ever presented in this city, and represents the best in the old classics, in the operatic, and in the modern schools of vocal music.

Mr. Arthur Milton, who is assisting Miss Allan, possesses a splendid bass voice, and sings with great ease and freedom. One of his numbers is that fine Song of Sergeant, "Blow, Blow, Thou Winter Wind," which is specially suited to a robust bass voice.

REPLY TO TREASON CHARGE.

Former Russian Minister Says None Would be Left If Suspects Were Dismissed.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 6.—The testimony of M. Gutchkoff, president of the third Duma, against Colonel Miasoivoff, in the trial of M. Soukhomlinoff, former Minister of War, and his wife, charged respectively with high treason and as an accomplice in the crime, was answered by M. Soukhomlinoff, who declared that he had no reason to suspect the colonel of being a spy. The former War Minister admitted receiving a number of letters reflecting on Miasoivoff, but said that he would have no assistants left if he had dismissed everybody who was similarly accused.

Gen. Gurko, former commander on the south-western front, charged with treasonable conduct toward the revolution, will be exiled from Russia. Gen. Gurko, according to reports, is the first person against whom such a measure has been taken by the revolutionary Government.

WHERE HONOR COUNTS.

"Notice: A concealed mistake may cause a brave man to lose his life."

The simple, dramatic grimness of the terse sign reproduced above as hung in a British military airplane hangar, testifies to the caution with which the fighting machines of the English airmen are overhauled. A single frayed wire or weakened strut might mean the loss of the lives of the pilot and machine gun operator, and the destruction of a fighting mechanism worth thousands of dollars.

The "honor system" means more in an airplane hangar than in the greatest banking institution in the world. Absolute conscientiousness in preparing the machine for the next flight is imperative. Careless, casual surveys or the neglect of needed repairs generally purchase the inspector's leisure with the blood of the nerviest fighting men on earth.

WORLD SERIES TO OPEN ON OCT. 6th

Chicago, Sept. 5. — Details for the world's series are to be worked out at a special meeting of the National Commission to be held in Cincinnati on Sept. 20th, President Johnston of the American League, said to-day. The spirited race between Chicago and Boston for the American League pennant will have been definitely enough settled by that time, President Johnston said, to assure going ahead with the plans.

Although Charles A. Comiskey, the president of the Chicago club, declines to make any statement claiming the American League championship, orders for world series seats are beginning to pour in from middle west cities. One Chicago enthusiast placed an order reserving 32 box seats to-day. These orders are being held up however, until Chicago is certain of beating Boston.

There is a strong possibility that the series, if Chicago is the American League contender, will start in Chicago on Saturday, Oct. 6, President Johnston said the National League might waive this formality, and agree to start the games in the west, so a Sunday game could be played.

New York, September 5. — Seats for the world's series baseball games this year won't be reserved by mail but every ticket possible will be placed on public sale at the grounds, the New York National League Club announced to-night. Numerous letters asking for reservations have been received by the club, it was announced.

"Absolutely no reservations will be made and nothing will be done in regard to the world series until the time has arrived when it will be possible to issue an announcement covering all details," the club's statement said.

CHIEF HOWARD HAS RETURNED

Two Meetings Were Held in the City Hall Yesterday

Fire Chief Howard has returned to the city. Hearing of the action of the City Council in demanding his dismissal the Chief returned home one day sooner than he anticipated. Two meetings were held in the City Hall yesterday and were attended by members of the City Council and the Police Department. Chief of Police Thompson was present at the morning session and in the afternoon a number of the constables were on hand to answer questions put by the Aldermen.

Letter Sent To-day.

A letter setting forth the allegations has been prepared and will be forwarded to Chief Howard to-day. The latter in effect will call upon the Chief to reply to the accusation. A meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council will then be called and the matter dealt with. It is the intention of the Aldermen to have several persons present at this meeting who, it is claimed, will give evidence bearing on the case.

Fruit Crop Is Not Good

The crops of larger fruits are a disappointment to the public this year. Peaches, usually on the market by September 1st, are two weeks late and if the weather conditions are not changed, the crop will not be large. The plum crop has turned out, like the apple and pear, very small and high in price, varying from 90c. to $1.10 per basket.

FRANCE FIGHTS FAMINE.

Difficulties Faced by Men in Charge of Food Question.

The food question in France is regarded as very serious. All the measures thus far taken have failed to assure positively the required supply of bread to carry the country over to the next wheat crop, and the Government has just decided in a special Cabinet meeting to require important sacrifices.

No more pastry and no more crackers or biscuits will be made, except for the army, after a date still to be fixed. No more highly refined flour will be tolerated. Every miller will be obliged to leave a greater percentage of bran in his output, and eventually cornmeal, rye or barley may be mixed with the wheat flour to eke out the supply.

The experiences of the past year in France have shown the impossibility of influencing economic conditions by decree. The maximum selling price of wheat was fixed at a price equivalent to $1.85 a bushel, in order to avoid an increase in the cost of bread. The result was a great decrease in wheat acreage; the farmers preferred to sow oats and barley that were not subject to any limitations and brought better prices.

The retail price of butter on the Paris market was fixed at the equivalent of 68 cents a pound. Immediately the receipts fell from forty-two tons to less than nine tons a day. The butter went to the British front where it readily brought eighty cents a pound.

The new Minister of Subsistence, Maurice Violette, removed the limitation and more butter arrived, but the price went up to a dollar a pound at retail.

Most persons interested in the question, among them such writers as Senator Henry Cheron, formerly Under Secretary of War, now are of the opinion that neither prices nor supplies can be affected by decrees; that it is entirely a question of production and economy over which the intermediaries can have only a passing control. This seems to be the conclusion M. Violette has reached in his short experience in power.

According to a story, M. Violette found a high pile of papers on his desk when he took charge of the difficult task of regulating the cost of living.

"What are all these documents?" he inquired.

"Those," replied his chief of staff, "are the unanswered questions that you put to your predecessor in the chamber."

From all quarters come demands for a cessation of questions, debates, and cross purpose action, and for a concentration of effort upon production.

The wheat crop of 1917, according to estimates gathered by Senator Cheron, will be 7,400,000 bushels short of that of 1916. To make up this shortage it is proposed to increase to the limit of seeding capacity the acreage of oats, barley, and potatoes during the time yet remaining.

COAXING THE SALMON.

Try Trout Fishing Tactics When You Go After This Game Fish.

When you are going to make a try for salmon remember your trout fishing. Keep low in the grass and bushes, cast delicately over the entire pool, beginning at the tail, where the fish are most apt to be in ordinary weather, and, working up to the very head, where they are often found after a rise of water, propel the fly with the variety of motion known to every trout fisher, and particularly try it at various depths.

I have often found that the only way to start a salmon was to sink the fly at least two feet and rely upon a tiny spasmodic twitch now and then (as of a drowning insect) to do the trick. This is often effective after a fish has come up once and refuses to repeat the experiment.

When a rise comes it will probably be a slow one. Do not move the fly at all after the first sign. Strike lightly, but firmly, on the first impact if the line is short, and when you have counted two or three after the rise if the line is long. Advice not to strike, if applicable at all, pertains only to swift water when fishing downstream. Under any other conditions failure to strike is often suicidal.—Outing.

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

OTTAWA, Sept. 6.—The War Times Election Act, introduced this afternoon by Solicitor-General Meighen, will be a long one, due principally to the fact that conditions in the different provinces as to the franchise are varied. It will contain three important features, disfranchisement, the extension of the existing enfranchisement and provision for Dominion lists. While no official announcement of the provisions of the measure will be given out until three o'clock, it is contended by the government members that the disenfranchisement provisions will not be so rigid as in Australia, where all men of alien birth are disenfranchised, except those who have sons or brothers in the Expeditionary Forces. It is stated that the exceptions in the Canadian measure will be wider and that a time limit will be set. It is understood in the latter regard that men who have been naturalized for fifteen years will have the right to vote; moreover it is said the disfranchisement will not apply to Germans or Austrians who were American citizens before coming to Canada.

The provisions for a further extension of the franchise, it is said, is pretty well along the lines already intimated, namely, the wives, mothers, sisters or daughters who are of age, of men who have actually gone overseas, will have the vote. This will not apply, it is said, to the female relatives of men who have not gone overseas.

Contrary to former predictions the compilation of lists will not be done along the lines existing in Saskatchewan and Alberta. It is contended that provision for a judicial review is not made in these provinces. In the new bill here will be a judicial review everywhere. In Saskatchewan and Alberta provision is made for an enumerator in each polling division. Lists are prepared, and posted up. It is for any man left off thereafter to prove qualifications and his vote is taken in a separate envelope to be passed upon later. It is calculated that it will take at least four weeks to make the lists.

Hostile criticism has been aroused by the report that the franchise bill while taking the vote from certain enemy born citizens will make an exception in favour of those who were American citizens before coming to Canada. "Such a provision," said one critic, "would amount to this: the Canadian government would be in the position of repudiating its own solemn pledge to the men who were naturalized in good faith, while, at the same time, recognizing the pledge which was made to them by the United States. What will alien born residents of Canada think?" he asked. "Will they not conclude that in Canada itself the protection of the United States is a greater guarantee than the protection of Canada?"

A Home Recipe For Removing Wrinkles

Who will blame the modern woman for trying to look as young and attractive as she reasonably can? Why should she be placed at a disadvantage in numerous ways by wearing wrinkles, if she can avoid these hateful marks of advancing age? Few women, however, know what to do to effectually rid themselves of wrinkles or sagginess. Most of the advertised preparations are unsatisfactory and very expensive. Try a very simple and harmless home remedy, which any woman can make, will work wonders where all the patent preparations fail.

Buy an ounce of powdered saxolite at any drug store. Dissolve the whole ounce in a half pint of witch hasel and use as a wash lotion. The results are practically instantaneous. Marked improvement is noticed immediately after the very first trial. Wrinkles and sagging are corrected and the face feels so refreshed and smug like.

BRIEF HOLIDAY FOR THE PREMIER

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

OTTAWA, Sept. 6.—There is a possibility that Sir Robt. Borden will take a brief holiday in the woods before returning to the House. It is not expected that the Franchise Bill will be called for a second reading until the beginning of next week, in consequence, though that is not definite.

Says Conscription Would Not Carry Through West

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

TORONTO, Sept. 6. — Returned from a trip to the West, E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., to-day expressed his conviction that conscription would not carry in the West. "A few months ago people generally were in favour of the scheme," said Mr. Johnston. "There appears to be a great change in this respect, and I think it is due to the fact that the people are becoming convinced that it is used, perhaps by both sides, as a political question. Besides, on reflection, they apparently think that the West has done more than its share, and that they should not be forced into the ranks, having already done their part so well.

"Believing in conscription myself as the proper method of dealing with the matter, I discussed it from that standpoint, but many people told me that the lack of men in the West, and the surplus of men in the East weighed with them in determining the application of the principle of conscription. In other words, there is infinitely more material in the East than in the West, without loss or injury to the country.

"I think, too, that there is a lack of confidence in the administration of the law, perhaps by either party, although Laurier appears to stand well with the people out West."

War Times Election Act Is Introduced

Measure Brought Down By Hon. Arthur Meighen This Afternoon

Canadian Press Despatch:

OTTAWA, Sept. 6. — Hon. Arthur Meighen, Solicitor-General, in the Commons this afternoon introduced the War Times Election Act, of which notice was given by Sir Robert Borden. While the provisions of the bill as finally adopted by the Cabinet, have not yet been announced, it is thought they will provide for the disenfranchisement during the war of naturalized Canadians who were born in enemy countries, also conscientious objectors to military service and those who fail to answer the call to the colours. Also many votes may be given to the female relatives of all members of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces.

Dies From The Effects Of Gas

Miss Bridget Hegarty Apparently Neglected to Turn the Jet of New Gas Stove

Miss Bridget Hagarty, 543 Elm St., died last night in St. Joseph's Hospital as a result of gas poisoning.

Miss Hagarty on Saturday night apparently neglected to turn the jet of a new gas stove, with the use of which she was not familiar, off to the fullest extent, and retired to bed. On Sunday relatives called at the house but on receiving no answer, presumed that she had gone out. On Monday however Mr. F. D. McFadden, a nephew of the deceased, became alarmed about her apparent long absence and forced in the door to find her partially asphyxiated in her bed. She was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital but her condition rendered it impossible to save her and she passed away on September 5th.

Miss Hagarty was born in Ireland, but has resided in Canada since a small child. During her long residence in the city she became known to and was respected by a large circle of friends who will hear of her death with the keenest regret.

There are left of her immediate family to mourn her death, two sisters, Mrs. Martin McFadden, (82) and Mrs. Hurley, 487 King street.

The funeral will take place on Saturday from the residence of Mrs. Hurley to St. Peter's Cathedral and cemetery, at 9 o'clock.

Vote Will Be A Light One

Results Will Be Bulletined by the Examiner

The result of to-day's voting in connection with the Ackerman by-law will in all probability reveal a light vote. The officials in charge of the voting do not anticipate any difficulty in securing a substantial majority for the measure. The majority necessary to carry the by-law will be two-thirds of the total vote polled. The polls close at five o'clock and the final result should be known by six o'clock. The results of the voting will be bulletined by The Examiner.

CREERAR WILL NOT COME IN

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Sept. 6. — It is stated here to-day that T. A. Creerar, head of the Grain Growers' Grain Co., has finally decided against coming into a national government under Sir Robert Borden. It is understood that the Grain Growers' Association are opposed to supporting such a government.

In the Roman Catholic church, Haileybury, on September 4th, a very pretty wedding took place when Katherine Mahoney, of Peterborough, became the bride of Martin Bolger, of White River parish. The bride was assisted by her cousin, Lucie McCauley, of Brady Lake, while the groom was supported by his nephew, John O'Gorman of Renfrew.

The bride was attired in a gown of plum-coloured silk. The bridesmaid was prettily dressed in white embroidery and carried flowers. They took wedding breakfast in the Vandorne Hotel, Haileybury.

Drastic Changes Are Made By The War Time Election Act

Naturalized Citizens of Enemy Birth Will Be Disenfranchised But Will Not Be Compelled to Serve Under the Military Service Act—Hon. Arthur Meighen's Address

OTTAWA, Sept. 6.— The War-time Election Act brought down in the Commons this afternoon by Hon. Arthur Meighen, Secretary of State, provides for the enfranchisement of all wives or widows, mothers, daughters or sisters (of age) of men who have gone overseas. It provides for the disfranchisement of all men of German, Austrian or Turkish birth who have been naturalized since March 31, 1902. Exception is made of such men as have sons or grandsons in the Canadian forces. Conscientious objectors are also disfranchised.

In introducing the bill Hon. Arthur Meighen said: "The bill, which I now present, affects only an election in time of war or during mobilization, and goes out of existence entirely when such period is over.

"The necessity of a Wartime Elections Act, arises solely from the fact that there is a war time election, and the purpose of the bill now introduced is solely to meet the extraordinary conditions encountered, in the necessity of deciding at such a time by an electoral contest, so vital an issue as now confronts the Canadian people."

Election Inevitable.

"We find ourselves compelled to submit what is really the destiny of our country to the arbitrament of the ballot at a time when the best part of our manhood is struggling in the throes of a death combat overseas. Upwards of 300,000 of the sons of Canada are absent from our shores, and of those 300,000 it is a moral certainty that a large percentage will not be physically able to exercise the franchise. The nearer we approach the reality that a general election is inevitable, the more regrettable the necessity for such an election appears."

Give Fighting Men Vote.

"We have passed a military voters' bill which to the best of our power places the franchise within the reach of our fighting men, but no effort of this Parliament can do the impossible and enable all, or nearly all of those fighting men to vote. It may indeed transpire that a relatively large proportion are in effect, though not by statute, disfranchised. An election therefore in war time, and particularly at this stage of the war, is an injustice and a great injustice to the overseas soldiers of Canada, and of all classes to whom a country should never be unjust, first is that country's defenders.

"But this is not all. The entire personal force and influence of these 300,000 men is stripped from them or the purpose of this contest. They are the foremost of our sons, the very bone, sinew, and vitality of Canada.

Objectors Relieved.

The first class referred to as being disfranchised consists of those entitled under the Military Service Act to be relieved on conscientious grounds from combatant service, and the second class is constituted by that portion of our foreign population who have recently come to Canada and are of alien enemy birth or near extraction.

As to the conscientious objectors, it is not considered right that those who refuse on conscientious grounds to bear arms should be enabled in the midst of a war either to compel others to fight for them or to deny to those who do battle the right to reinforcements.

"If it is their belief that a nation should not defend itself by arms, and if on that belief they refuse to fight for the existence of their country, then they should not be in a position to exercise control over their country while it is in arms and while it has to fight to live."

Satisfactory Conduct.

"As to the second class," he said, "those born in enemy countries and who have in recent years naturalized in Canada and those who though born in European countries not geographically within the enemies domain, are nevertheless of German, Austrian, or Turkish blood, kin and language, it has from the commencement of hostilities been found undesirable to enlist them for combatant service, I am free to admit and indeed proud to say that in the main, having regard to peaceful pursuits within this country, this portion of our population has, all things considered, conducted itself satisfactorily. Many of them, however, have sons or brothers, their very nearest of kin, fighting against us on the soil of Europe.

"It would seem unnatural, were it desirable, to compel these men to do battle against their kin and against the country from which they can scarcely wholly as yet be divorced in sympathy."

"Great Britain has recognized this principle since the outbreak of war, and with very few exceptions has declined to admit to her arms men of alien enemy birth or near extraction. The Commonwealth of Australia, in legislating for a general election held there some months ago, refused to admit to the franchise all of its citizens of alien enemy birth, no matter how long they had been in the country."

"By this bill only such as have been naturalized since 31st of March, 1902, are affected, all others are left untouched. In Australia an exemption was made of Armenians and Assyrians and of those who had sons or brothers enlisted. In Canada we make the same exception and we except also those whose grandsons have joined the forces, further more, the bill specifically states that wherever there is disfranchisement for this war election, there goes with it exemption from combatant service.

Won't Need to Fight.

"Under the Military Service Act, no man will be forced to fight who is not under this Act allowed to vote, included among those of enemy birth naturalized within the last 15 years are those who though born in other European countries, speak as their mother tongue, the language of an alien enemy, these may fairly be presumed to be of near enemy extraction and not essentially different from those of enemy birth. To them also is granted exemption from combatant service under the compulsion law, wherever the privilege of voting is withheld, the exemption from military service is granted and extended also to their sons who are under age.

"I may add that as to both these cases, there have come from some of the people themselves requests that this step be taken. Plainly, it is not fair either to those men themselves that they should be called upon to vote upon an issue which means the sending or withholding of troops who will go to do battle against their kin, and on the other hand it certainly is not fair to the rest of our people, on whose shoulders and on whose hearts is the burden of the war, that its conduct and its virour should be even in part determined by those who cannot participate and whose sympathies and predisposition of necessity cannot be as those of the rest of Canada.

Use Provincial Lists.

Beyond the two features I have mentioned, namely, the addition of women and disqualification of a certain limited class of aliens, the Provincial franchise and qualification for voters are adopted throughout every Province. These are the main features of this Act. The alternation of the franchise, of course, requires adjustments in the machinery for the preparation of lists, hitherto, Provincial lists have been adopted in seven of the Provinces, and the Dominion has made its own lists in Alberta, Saskatchewan, and the Yukon.

"Those at home who should be at home and those at home who should be overseas are in the full enjoyment not only of their ballot but of the exertion of all their faculties in whatever direction they desire to exert them in this contest but a penalty falls on those who have been true enough and brave enough to fight our battles, in that they are deprived in part of the ballot and wholly of their electoral influence.

"Nor can we forget that some 30,000 have already fallen in the struggle. Their voices are still, while the voices of those who remained behind can be heard, and will be heard. Some thousands more are prisoners of war and are suffering hardships unspeakable for the sake of those at home. These men can have no voice, but those for whom they suffer are in the full enjoyment of very privilege of citizenship.

"The considerations to which I have referred will, I think, make it plain to the minds of all, that if a contest at the polls must come, Parliament must address itself to the task of bringing about such electoral conditions as will repair as fully as Parliament can repair the injustice that would, under all ordinary franchise, fall upon our soldiers overseas. To do this is the primary purpose of the bill which is now introduced.

The Women's Enfranchisement.

"It is proposed that by a measure of woman enfranchisement, added strength shall be given to the voice of the soldiers of Canada. Those of their nearest kin at home may be presumed to be most likely to re-echo the sentiments of their sons, husbands and brothers overseas, and by this bill, the nearest female relatives of the men of our expeditionary forces who have left the shores of Canada, are given the right to vote. The wife or widow, the mothers, the daughters, and the sisters of overseas soldiers are by this bill enfranchised.

"It will be remembered that earlier in the session the Prime Minister intimated to Parliament that in his judgment it would be proper to extend the franchise to the women of Canada, subject to such conditions and limitations as Parliament might provide, and that whatever extension of the franchise was made to one Province, should be made to all. Under the abnormal circumstances precipitated by the present war, the measure of women suffrage which I have outlined is deemed fitting and does indeed constiute, in my judgment, a reasonably general extension of the franchise to women.

The Free Press Out Of Politics

Announces That It Will Support a War-the-War Government

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Sept. 6.—John W. Dafoe, Editor of the Free Press, who left last night for Ottawa to assist in the formation of a National government, announced in the Free Press to-day that for the duration of the war the Free Press is out of party politics. It knows only Canada and her perils and it recognizes only one duty, that of serving country with whole-souled devotion.

"In the coming Dominion elections the Free Press will be happy to the extent of its power and influence to support any candidate who is placed in the field by a bona fide union convention, representing all elements in population, devoted to the prosecution of war, and to support a National Win-the-war government, which is going to be formed in spite of all scheming by politicians, corporations and vested interests to force a party fight upon the people of this Dominion.

"The Free Press will not be concerned, respecting any such candidate, with anything beyond his attitude towards the war. It will make no difference to it whether he is in politics Liberal, Conservative or Independent, in religion, Protestant, Catholic, Hebrew or Mussalman; in race, white, red or black. Nothing counts or matters in these times but getting on with the war."

HARDWARE MARKETS ARE STEADIER

Advances in Some Lines—Iron and Steel Market a Little Easier

Hardware markets are passing through an interesting stage as there is apparent a general hesitancy to advance prices in the face of an easier feeling in the market for iron and steel. Ingot metals have shown a generally weaker tendency while iron and steel have shown a disposition to await time pending announcement by the United States Government with respect to price-fixing. Retailers also give evidence of being abreast with the situation and are not looking ahead for any length of time in the future. Business will in all probability be more of a hand-to-mouth nature for some time to come. A seasonable movement of fall lines has started which may be expected to develop as cool weather approaches. There have been a number of advances during the week, including those on game traps, woodchopping wedges, posthole augers, lamp burners, lantern burners, lubricating oil, handsaws, trowels, carpenters' chalk, drain cleaners, tree pruners, sidewalk scrapers. Linseed oil prices were shaded downward from the high levels of last week, but the range of prices on turpentine has been widened. Business in hardware lines is seasonably good.

Refused To Display Flags

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Sept. 7—Amsterdam despatch says that when the Emperor William visited Brussels last week on the way to the Flanders front, the populace refused to comply with the request to display flags. Instead they drew the blinds and placed signs closed for national mourning."

SALMON IS HIGH A VERY SMALL PACK

Comment on the Market Situation Regarding Food Stuffs

Of primary interest to the grocery trade during the week was the announcement of prices for the 1917 salmon pack. It was generally expected prices would be high and in this there was no disappointment. Owing to the disappointingly small pack there will be only a percentage delivery by the packers. In the case of one-pound sockeye tins there will be only 9 per cent. of orders delivered, while in sockeye half-pound tins there will be only 40 per cent. delivery. On cohoe salmon there will be 10 per cent. delivery on one-pound and 40 per cent. on half-pound tins. On pink salmon there will be the best delivery of any of the brands, namely, 50 per cent. on one-pound and 100 per cent. on half-pounds.

Rumours of an embargo on the export of bacon from Canada are not taken seriously by those connected with the provision trade. It is pointed out that Great Britain needs the bacon and that in all probability some central buying agency will be established similar to that in operation for the purchase of Canadian cheese. Egg production has been heavier during the past week, but has not been sufficient to make the price recede. Butter prices remained unchanged. Pasture is now in excellent shape and production of creamery butter and cheese should be greatly facilitated throughout Ontario.

Advances have been recorded on jams baking powder lobsters tapioca and sago, herbs, sulphur, tobacco, tomato soups. A decline was recorded on porridge wheat which comes as a welcome change in the steadily upward trend of the market. Manitoba flour was another commodity in which a decline was registered a clean drop of $1 per barrel taking place. This was induced by reason of a 20c. decline in wheat. Apparently, through inspired sources, the idea has gained currency that the price to be established for Manitoba wheat is to be $2.20 per bushel. And prices in the market forthwith dropped to that level before the official announcement has been made. Sugar is in weak market due to the establishment of a lower price in the United States for beet sugar. Declines are looked for in the Canadian market. Business with the grocery trade is reported very good.—Canadian Grocer.

"MOUNTAIN MADNESS"

By Anna Alice Chapin

Martin Hale and Jack Radnor passed the receiving ladies, and Hale's bow was as deep and as courtly as the others. He carried his borrowed plumes with an air which was a never ceasing surprise to Radnor and the two or three other men who were in the secret. Fitting him out had been no easy task. Jack's own things were out of the question, for Martin bulked obviously larger than did he, so he had sought out Ted Meredith, ex-football star and amateur fighter, and justly proud of his depth of chest, breadth of shoulder, and length of limb. He was somewhat chagrined to find that his evening clothes could only be put upon the frame of the big mountain fellow at the imminent risk of bursting out at every seam. Eventually Nicholas Wayne rose to the emergency—a stolid young giant, with a hug, though not particularly athletic body. What Nick had in superfluous flesh Hale made up in hard muscle, and the suit did well enough. The effect was excellent—indeed, Jack feared it was too noticeably so for no one could have failed to look twice at the big, easily moving figure with the tawny shock of hair. That there would be many conjectures as to his identity was unavoidable. They could only hope that Hale would find Polly as early in the evening as possible and disappear with her before he was discovered.

Jack looked anxiously about for Ralph Denby, but could see no signs of him. With Hale he moved on past the favor table under the luminous softness of the colored electric lights.

"Who is that?" demanded Martin, and Jack felt the shoulder under his friendly hand stiffen to iron. He could not follow the other's gaze, because of the mask, but vaguely he turned in the direction toward which Hale was fronting. Immediately he noted the tall figure, the black hair, the rose-red dress, and remembered what Enid had told him about the prospective costumes for the evening.

"That's Alice Baker," he said at once, but even as he spoke he doubted his own statement. Martin put the doubt into words by returning swiftly:

"That? Never! That's Polly Mason—"

"You're crazy!" said Jack for the second time that night.

This time the mountaineer was less amiable about it.

"If that's not Polly, then I am crazy!" he said bluntly and stood still, stiffly at attention, watching the tall, masked girl in the rose-red frock.

Puzzled and fascinated, Radnor watched her, too. It was quite true that, like as she was to Enid's friend, in stature, dress and coloring, she was quite different in some obscure way hard to define. Her black hair was piled high on her proudly held head with no sprinkling of white. That, in itself, would be like Miss Baker. She was erratic and would doubtless, at a Powder Dance, choose to be a shining, unpowdered exception!

Yet the puzzle lingered. Alice was of naturally erect and free carriage, her figure was full and beautiful, she moved with ease and grace and energy. But here was—something more. The black-haired woman who glided in stately yet sinuous fashion down the alley-way of palms was to Alice Baker what the moon is to the arc light. Not that Alice was artificial, but this was reality itself, personified, incarnate. It seemed to Jack Radnor that he had never seen complete natural freedom and beauty wedded to utter dignity and grace in all his life. Then his mind leaped back to the trail on the Ridge,—to Malone's shadowed cabin. Yes, she had moved like that! But where had she learned this added subtle queenliness and ease Was it part of her gown, her setting? Was it merely her wonderful adaptability, or was it that for the first time she found herself in the environment which best brought out her points, her finest values? At all events, there was no longer any doubt in his brain as to her identity.

"It's Miss Mason all right," he said simply to Hale. "I don't know where Alice is, nor what it all means, but—it's so! Do you want me to tell her you're here"

Hale nodded, then drew a quick breath and shook his head. His outstretched hand fell on Radnor's arm.

"Just a moment!" he muttered. "I want to look at her! She—she's very beautiful, isn't she?"

The words were a question, as though he feared to trust his own vision. It was an odd question, too: a woman masked, and to call her beautiful . . . . Yet, gazing also, Jack understood. There was very real beauty in this masked woman—a beauty not merely of well-proportioned lines and curves and values, but a beauty of inherent personality, which made each slightest gesture of hers a symphony, each step a step in a sort of gently regal progress.

Suddenly Martin started forward. "What are you doing?" said Jack. "Wait, and I'll get her to come to speak to you where people won't—"

"Wait! Not for a moment!" Hale strode straight to the side of the rose-hued figure and caught her hand in his. Jack saw her start and her other hand go to her breast. And even as he saw that, he saw something far more disquieting,—the form of Ralph Denby standing in one of the open doorways. He was adjusting his mask, according to the rules of the ballroom, but Jack knew him and his heart sank.

For only a moment Ralph Denby stood motionless, looking fixedly at the big, sunny-haired man beside the girl in the rose-red dress. Then he walked quickly up to him and laid his hand on his arm.

"Martin Hale," he said sharply.

There was a little stir of excitement. Many of the people present had heard of the man whom the Denbys and Sheriff Heaton were trying to trap. The general impression was that he was a sort of bandit. Was it possible that this large, composed individual standing so imperturbably there in their flower-decked ballroom was the same desperate character who had led the hold-up on the Millionaires' Local?

The girl in the rose-red dress was panting hurriedly, more, it seemed, in excitement, than fear.

"How do you all know he's Martin Hale?" she cried, in a warm contralto voice unwontedly quickened by emotion. "He's masked."

"And no one unmasks until midnight!" said Jack, grasping young Denby's arm. "Be a sport, Ralph!"

"I tell you I know—" began Ralph hotly.

But the big man in the mask was speaking. His slow, indolent words carried to every ear there.

"I'm not telling who I am just at present," he said. "You all can make out I'm one person or another. Suit yourself. But I've got something to say before you fix on who I am. I came here to-night taking right much of a chance—"

"I told you!" broke in Ralph.

"Wait!" muttered Jack Radnor.

"I came here, taking the chance of losing a whole lot of things folks like to hang on to——my liberty, for instance."

He paused a moment, then he turned to the girl beside him and with infinite gentleness drew her hand within his arm. Then he addressed the whole ballroom.

"This lady's father's right ill,—dying, maybe"—a choking cry came from her lips and he patted her hand—"and so I—well, I just came to fetch her, that's all. I want to see her safe with her father, and then—" He swung back to Ralph Denby, and his voice came with a quicker, harder cadence, "Then I'll come back here and unmask at midnight when the rest do!"

There was a second's breathless pause and then one of the men gave an irrepressible cheer. It was caught up by dozens and the ballroom rang.

"Now, sir," said the masked stranger to Ralph, "do you all ask me to unmask?"

Ralph turned away.

"At midnight, with the rest," he said briefly.

"I thank you all, sir."

The tawny-haired man and the girl in the rose-red dress walked out of the ball-room. Jack went with them. Just outside he held out his hand to Hale, without a word. Their fingers met and clasped hard. To Polly, Radnor said:

"Good-bye, Miss Mason. My congratulations. He's the finest gentleman and the best sport I ever knew."

And Polly, crying and clinging to her lover's arm, knew that it was true. Whatever trouble might come now, she had found herself.

"Good-bye until midnight!" said Martin Hale to Radnor, and went away into the darkness with the rose-red gown glimmering beside him.

CHAPTER XXIII
ELECTRIC LIGHT AND LIGHTNING.

Then dress, then dinner, then awakes the world!
Then glare the lamps. . . . .
Thrice happy he who, after a survey
Of the good company, can win a corner,
And look on as a mourner, or a scorner,
Or an approver, or a mere spectator,
Yawning a little as the night grows later.

—Lord Bryon.

Radnor stood a moment staring after them. It occurred to him that he had not the slightest idea how they were going to get up the mountain; then he laughed as he told himself that Martin Hale was not likely to have neglected arrangements or preparations of any kind.

The rustle of a skirt beside him made his heart leap. For the first time in over an hour he thought of Enid and turned eagerly in the hope that it might be she. But it was Alice Baker, not in costume but ordinary evening dress, with her mask dangling from her wrist.

"I heard it all!" she whispered excitedly. "and I think it's just perfectly thrilling. What a stunning couple they are! Is he as handsome unmasked as—Enid says?" she ended with malice.

"Quite, I fancy," said Jack, suppressing a desire to box her ears. "Where on earth is Enid, anyway?"

Alice looked at him in astonishment. "Don't you know?" she asked. "I thought, of course, she was with you."

"I? No: I've been too busy stage-managing Hale even to look her up. I suppose she was late, that's all."

"And I suppose that she had sneaked off to a corner of the veranda, the way I did, so that her best young man could come and talk to her undisturbed."

"Isn't she with her mother?" demanded Radnor, a little more anxiously.

"No: Mrs. Forsythe is at the favor table, and she is looking all over for Enid. Peep through the window and you can see her."

Jack took a frowning survey of Enid's mother, who sat at the long table of pretty many-hued trifles, the picture of incarnate restlessness and worry—properly subdued for the occasion.

"And," proceeded Alice irrelevantly, "that girl, that raving beauty from the top of nowhere, has gone off with my dress!"

"She'll return it," said Jack absently. He was thinking of Enid with more and more concern.

"Return it!" repeated Miss Baker with scorn. "And what will there be left to return, I ask you, after this storm"

Jack started.

"I believe it is going to rain," he said, noticing the change in the air for the first time.

"He believes it is going to rain," repeated Alice, with open disdain. "My dear man, the storm has been growling and spitting like a wild cat for half an hour. Listen!"

Low and sullen the echo of the thunder came to them through the thick, damp night. It was indeed not unlike the snarling growl of some wild beast chained far away, yet straining to break its fetters. The sky was black and close. The smell of the rain was in the air. As a matter of fact, it had been raining for some time on the mountain ridge less than two miles from where they stood.

"I wonder—" Alice was beginning when a step checked her.

"Well, young people! Have you been playing Chance your partners? Where is my boy, and where is my little friend Miss Enid?"

"You will forgive this?" indicating his cigar. "I just came down from the hotel and wanted a breath of air before I went into the very attractive, but exceedingly warm-looking ballroom. It is going to be a big storm, Radnor."

"I'm afraid so," said Jack, thinking of Hale and Polly on the trail. Lucky for him that he did not know Enid was out there, too, somewhere in the rain-threatened night!

"There is always something exhilarating to me in these mountain storms," said the Judge, puffing comfortably. "They are so huge, so dynamic that they soothe one. One's very helplessness becomes restful—one's own small violences become as nothing compared with the great passions of the elements."

"If you both excuse me," said Alice Baker, abruptly, "I'll go to look again for Enid."

She slipped away quickly, and the Judge offered Jack his cigar case.

"Thanks, not now. Hello- That was a flash and no mistake!"

The storm held its breath, as it were, for a space. You might have fancied that it did so viciously, taunting the apprehensive earth as an animal tortures its prey, or as a savage postpones the sacrifice hour by hour to prolong his victim's fears.

WOULD PROHIBIT IDLENESS.

Governor of Mississippi Would Compel Lazy Men to Work.

Proposing to call an extraordinary session of the State Legislature of Mississippi, Governor Bilbo has announced that he will urge the law-making body, in addition to making financial and revenue laws, to pass a law prohibiting idleness in the State.

The law, which will be similar to one recently passed in the State of West Virginia, will require every able-bodied man to enlist in the army, to work in some profitable occupation, or to go to prison and be forced to work. Explaining his proposed plain, Governor Bilbo has declared that there are thousands of idlers in Mississippi who produce no thing and yet feel a necessity of eating now and then.

ANOTHER YEAR OF WAR

LEADING AMERICAN CRITIC MAKES GRAVE PREDICTION.

Tells Reasons Why Every Allied Country Must Be Prepared to Put Its Last Ounce of Strength Into the Conflict if the Germans Are To Be Completely Subdued.

LOOKING at the situation as it now stands, with the third anniversary of the struggle in sight, it seems to me that every sign points toward a four-year war. We shall continue to be pleased by the optimistic reports that those who sympathize with Russian liberalism give us. But there is very sound reason for believing that these reports do not reveal the extent of the Russian collapse. Actually the Allied cause has been deprived of not less than 1,500,000 soldiers, who were organized and commanded by brilliant generals. Discipline in these armies has been destroyed, temporarily at least.

This collapse has given Germany a chance to utilize in the West the troops that otherwise would have been contained and fully occupied in the East. It has given her another year's supply of men for the West. Her condition at the end of this time, if she does not win victory or peace, will be far worse than before, but this is a future consideration. Today she is better off, because she has new divisions to draw upon.

A complete collapse of Russia and the signing of a separate peace between Germany and Russia will only make the situation worse. Then I firmly believe the outcome of the war will depend upon the number of hundreds of thousands of men the United States can put on the western front by this time next year. Beyond next year the war cannot go. During next year Germany will collapse economically, militarily, all ways, if the struggle is prolonged. This is the common assertion of the Germans, themselves, who do not dream that the Allies can continue the war into next year.

But everything that has happened in the past month has but emphasized the importance of the American role in the war. Unless Russia returns to the attack, we must be ready next year to make up the deficiencies in French man-power and with the British continue the pounding and grinding up of German man-power until Germany consents to make peace terms that demonstrate the downfall of her military caste and leave the world in some sense protected against a renewal of the German attack.

Writing here for readers to whom I have been talking now for nearly three years, I think it would be folly to pretend that the present situation in Europe is favorable, viewed from the point of a German-American contest. That Russia, Britain, and France could conquer Germany and Austria, with Italy neutral or allied with the western powers I never doubted. With Russia in the war, the end this year would be assured. But the collapse of Russia leaves a gap in the alliance against Germany which can only be filled when we are ready and may be fatal to all if we are not ready before too many months.

It may be that Germany will collapse from starvation before the middle of August brings a new harvest. It may be that the German Socialists will compel the Government to make peace on the basis of a surrender, but I do not believe either thing will happen. It may be that Russia will attack and a new Brusiloff victory, like that of last year, will restore the balance. But I doubt it. Equally ill-founded seem to me German claims that they will win the war by their submarine campaign. Many months will pass before the British people are as hungry as the German has been for more than a year. And in this time the German situation is hardly likely to improve much.

When American troops begin to arrive in large numbers in Europe, I believe the Germans will see that the game is up, and not before, unless Russia comes back. Until the German masses see that the game is up, I think they will go on and their present expectation of victory has put an end to all chance of disintegration due to domestic discontent. Kitchener's estimate of a three-year war was based on a belief that Russia would continue.

With Russia out it seems to me that there can be no escape from a four-year period, unless America follows the Russian example and fails to do her part—then I think a peace by negotiation will come before next spring and leave Germany in possession of some of the fruits of her campaigns and not improbably in possession of that great Mitteleuropa, which would be but the basis for new campaigns of conquest to complete the work already begun, the work that was to give Germany world power and world domination. —From "An Ominous Month of War," by Frank H. Simonds, in The American Review of Reviews.

Washington a French Marshal.

Joffre is not the first French marshal to travel through the United States. He was preceded by George Washington something more than one hundred and thirty-five years ago. Probably few of our readers are aware that Washington ever held this exalted rank, but it was conferred upon him by Louis XVI. for the very good reason that Rochambeau was ordered to report to the American general, and as a matter of discipline could not take orders from one who was not his superior in the French service.

How to avoid Operations

These Three Women Tell How They Escaped the Dreadful Ordeal of Surgical Operations.

Hospitals are great and necessary institutions, but they should be the last resort for women who suffer with ills peculiar to their sex. Many letters on file in the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., prove that a great number of women after they have been recommended to submit to an operation have been made well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Here are three such letters. All sick women should read them.

Marinette, Wis.—"I went to the doctor and he told me I must have an operation for a female trouble, and I hated to have it done as I had been married only a short time. I would have terrible pains and my hands and feet were cold all the time. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and was cured, and I feel better in every way. I give you permission to publish my name because I am so thankful that I feel well again." —Mrs. Fred Brenner, Marinette, Wis.

Detroit, Mich.—"When I first took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was so run down with female troubles that I could not do anything, and our doctor said I would have to undergo an operation. I could hardly walk without help so when I read about the Vegetable Compound and what it had done for others I thought I would try it. I got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and a package of Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and used them according to directions. They helped me and today I am able to do all my work and I am well." —Mrs. Thos. Dwyer, 989 Milwaukee Ave., East, Detroit, Mich.

Bellevue, Pa.—"I suffered more than tongue can tell with terrible bearing down pains and inflammation. I tried several doctors and they all told me the same story, that I never could get well without an operation and I just dreaded the thought of that. I also tried a good many other medicines that were recommended to me and none of them helped me until a friend advised me to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. The first bottle helped, I kept taking it and now I don't know what it is to be sick any more and I am picking up in weight. I am 20 years old and weigh 148 pounds. It will be the greatest pleasure to me if I can have the opportunity to recommend it to any other suffering woman."—Miss Irene Froelicher, 1923 Manhattan St., North Side, Bellevue, Pa.

FORTY-SEVEN RONINS.

Strange Tragedy of Japan's Roman de Dix Cocalfed.

The municipal authorities of Tokio are restoring the beautiful temple of Sengakuji, at Takanawa, where are entombed "the Forty-seven Ronins of Ako." The tragedy of these chivalrous Ronins belongs to the most romantic period of Japanese history commemorating the self-sacrifice of the servants of Asano, Lord of Ako. An entire native literature exists on this subject. A visit to the temple grounds recalls to Oriental travelers the Tombs of the Mamelukes, near Cairo. The legend does not appeal to the Western mind, but the story is revered by all lovers of Japanese history. Briefly, it is this:

Lord Asano, while at Yedo, at Tokio was then called, attending upon the Shogun (April, 1701), was commanded to entertain an envoy from the Mikado. A stranger to the formalities, he appealed to a nobleman he thought his friend, one Kira. The later insulted him and Asano slashed him in the face with his sword. As this occurred in the palace of the Shogun, it was a mortal offense to the dignity of the place, only to be wiped out by the death of the offender. Asano was directed to perform harakiri at once, his estates were forfeited, his family declared extinct, and all the members of his clan disbanded. Under Japanese custom of 200 years ago, his clan became "Ronins" (i. e., "wave-men"), flaters or wanderers without a lord or home.

Vengeance must follow. Oishi Kuranosuke, senior member of the dead lord's clan, sweurs forty-six faithful ones to join him. Here is a curious feature of this vendetta: It is simplicity prescribed by custom, but is forbidden by law—like dueling in some countries. Not to have revenge meant social ostracism; to take it involved capital punishment! There was much dissembling on the part of the Ronins; but on January 30, 1703, during a violent snowstorm, an attack on Kira's mansion was made, the doors were forced, and the highborn wretch was dragged from an outhouse in which he had hidden and, declining to avail himself of the privilege of harakiri, to save his honor, he was slaughtered.

This "duty" performed, the little band, all equally responsible and therefore all of forfeited lives, marched at dawn of day to the temple of Sengakuji, at the other end of the city, respected and feasted by the people whose houses they passed. At the temple they were received by the Abbot in person. There they laid upon the grave of their beloved lord the head of his enemy. Then came final farewells and the execution of the inevitable decree. Each and every Ronin killed himself, as custom prescribed, by plunging a short, sharp sword into his vitals.

Their bodies were buried in the grounds of the same temple where rested their lord, for whom they had made the supreme sacrifice. During two centuries, popular and enthusiastic adoration has been a reward for the submission of these brave forty-seven men to the custom of their time and [illegible]

History Made Palatable.

Joseph Salvador, the French historian, and Jules Sandeau, a novelist, made their meeting at a public reception the occasion for a dispute as to the respective places which they occupied in the world of letters.

"The reading of history is like a pill—it needs the sugar coating to make it palatable," argued the novelist.

"Ah, but it is the ingredient which cures, not the coating," remarked the historian.

"Then let us divide the honors," said Sandeau, "for if it were not for my sugar coating your historical facts would dry on the shelves."

Help to Save Canada's Fruit Crop

A Practical Thrift Suggestion

This year, as never before, every quart of Canada's fruit crop should be used to the very best advantage. Though it all ripens within four months, it can be made to supply every table, every day in the year, at moderate cost.

Canning and preserving, done at home at the time when each fruit is cheapest, provide in delicious and economical form the daily fruit so necessary in a wholesome diet. Fruit put up at home is much cheaper than that which you buy, and the slight increase in its cost, due to the higher price of sugar, is small compared with the mounting cost of other foods.

Successful preserving and canning are by no means difficult, either, if you are careful to boil everything, and use

GASOLINE HAZARDS

The Safety and the Danger of This Widely Used Liquid.

DEADLY PERIL IN ITS VAPOR

When It Accumulates in a Closed Room Its Explosive Power Is Tremendous, but It Takes a Naked Flame or an Electric Spark to Ignite It.

Gasoline is a wonderfully safe liquid if handled properly, says William H. Stewart, Jr., the automobile expert. The real danger comes from the fact that some people do not realize how dangerous it is and others do not realize how safe it is and so give way to panic if any of it catches fire. A few suggestions for handling it will go far toward reducing the danger attendant on its use.

Gasoline is a mixture of several liquids obtained from crude petroleum by distillation. It is water white in color—that is, colorless except in large masses, when it has a bluish tinge. It boils at a temperature of 115 to 150 degrees F., giving off a heavy vapor, which is quite colorless, although possessing a characteristic odor. As this vapor may readily accumulate on the floor of a closed room, it constitutes one of the real dangers of gasoline. All it needs is a flame to cause it to spread destruction on all sides.

For the present note how safe gasoline really is. It cannot be set on fire by the glowing end of a cigarette or cigar, although if the cigarette paper catches fire the gasoline will take fire from that. This matter of safety may easily be proved by pouring a small quantity of gasoline into a tumbler and putting the lighted end of a cigarette into the vapor while puffing it vigorously. Having satisfied yourself that it will not ignite, dip the glowing end into the gasoline, and it will be instantly extinguished. Evidently the vapor needs the intense heat of a naked flame or the electric spark in order to ignite.

A popular error is to the effect that gasoline is highly explosive, some imagining that it is only necessary to touch a match to it in order to have it explode like gunpowder. Nothing could be further from the truth. Pour a dram or two on the kitchen table and set fire to it. It burns quietly with a characteristic yellow flame and black smoke. Even if heated in a closed tank it will not explode if a vent is provided. Of course water will explode if heated too much in a tank without a vent, and so will gasoline. The bursting of the tank is due to vapor pressure and not to an explosion such as is produced in an engine. But the most unreasoning fear comes from the idea of setting fire to a tank at the filler opening. Most people in imagination see the tank torn to pieces and the experimenter blown high in the air. Nothing of the sort happens. The vapor takes fire at the surface and burns quietly without any demonstration of any kind. This is only true, however, in case the tank has been filled several hours. A tank just emptied of gasoline or one freshly filled will give as good an explosion as one could wish.

To see why a full tank does not explode pour a few ounces of gasoline into a preserve jar. Shake it up and set fire to the vapor at the top. No explosion takes place because gasoline vapor is not explosive except when mixed with air in the right proportions.

Probably the greatest danger from gasoline comes from the fact that the vapor is very heavy and colorless. Since it cannot be seen there is little indication of its presence. It may accumulate at the bottom of a closed room or on the floor of a garage until some one drops a lighted match and sets fire to it. When allowed to accumulate in this manner its explosive power is tremendous. I have seen the wall of a brick building blown out as the result of an accumulation of gasoline vapor in the cellar. A lighted match caused the trouble.

It is evident, then, that care must be taken to avoid such accumulation. Keep the premises ventilated so that the vapor will be dissipated as fast as it is formed. Do not spill gasoline, being especially careful while filling tanks.—New York World.

Don't Eat Less—But Eat Better. There is no need of anyone going hungry. Canadians should eat foods that supply the greatest amount of nutriment at the lowest cost. The whole wheat grain is the most perfect food given to man. Shredded Wheat Biscuit is the whole wheat grain prepared in a digestible form. Every particle of the whole wheat berry is used—nothing wasted, nothing thrown away. Two or three of these biscuits with milk, sliced peaches or other fruits make a nourishing, satisfying meal at a cost of only a few cents.

Flies and Filth.

The fly is born in, lives and thrives upon filth. If no filth is allowed to accumulate in a house or its neighborhood it will not be troubled by flies, for they do not ordinarily stray far from their breeding places and their sources of food. In a thoroughly clean neighborhood they cannot live in the face of screens preventing their access to food and to the absence of manure heaps and other receptacles for filth in which to deposit their eggs.

One Man Overcomes a Nation.

Jean Angot, who died in 1551, was a French merchant in the African and East Indian trade. When some of his ships had been taken by the Portuguese he fitted out an armed fleet that kept Lisbon blockaded until the government of Portugal indemnified him for his losses. At one time he was immensely wealthy, but he lost in speculations and in money lent to the king of France, and the closing years of his life were passed in destitution.

Sells Only the Best.

"I tried to explain to my grocer what is meant by calories in food."

"Yes?"

"But he cut me short by becoming indignant and saying that he had made it a life long practice never to sell anything that was not in perfect condition."

A Strategic Retreat.

"John, what is a proletariat?"

"Mary, my dear, I am astonished you should ask me such a question, and before the children too!"

THE PEOPLE TRIUMPHANT.

They Always Conquer When They Are Resolved to Be Free.

In the efforts of the people, of the people struggling for their rights, moving not in organized, disciplined masses, but in their spontaneous action, man for man and heart for heart, there is something glorious. They can then move forward without orders, act together without combination and brave the flaming lines of battle without intrenchments to cover or walls to shield them.

No dissolute camp has worn off from the feelings of the youthful soldier the freshness of that home where his mother and sisters sit waiting with tearful eyes and aching hearts to hear good news from the wars. No long service in the ranks of the conqueror has turned the veteran's heart into marble. Their valor springs not from recklessness, from habit, from indifference to the preservation of a life knit by no pledges to the lives of others, but in the spirit and the strength of the cause alone they act, contend and bleed. In this they conquer!

The people always conquer! They always must conquer! Armies may be defeated, kings may be overthrown and new dynasties be imposed by foreign arms on an ignorant and slavish race that care not in what language the covenant of their subjugation runs nor in whose the deed of their barter and sale is made out.

But the people never invade and when they rise against the invader are never subdued. If they are driven from the plains they fly to the mountains. Steep rocks and everlasting hills are their castles, the tangled, pathless thicket their palisade, and nature, God, is their ally. Now he overwhelms the hosts of their enemies beneath his drifting mountains of sand; now he buries them under a falling atmosphere of polar snows. He lets loose his tempests on their fleets. He puts a folly into their counsels, a madness into the hearts of their leaders, and he never gave and never will give a final triumph over a virtuous and gallant people resolved to be free.—Edward Everett.

WORNOUT FLAGS.

Naval Rules Require That They Be Destroyed by Fire.

What should be done with an American flag, old, worn out, soiled or tattered, that is no longer serviceable as the national emblem? Should it be destroyed? How should it be destroyed without desecration?

There appears to be no law to point the way. But there is practice. And the best practice seems to point but one way. Burn the unserviceable flag. Perhaps make a rite and ceremony of this destruction by fire.

Total destruction seems the proper measure, and that is to be accomplished conveniently and quickly only by fire. To bury the flag has been suggested, but it is stated, on the other hand, that remains may be brought to light, and the method is not considered good practice.

To throw the discarded flag into the waste might be considered a desecration or at least an unpatriotic disregard of its sacredness. Fire appears the only sure way of satisfactory destruction.

To apply the flag to any further purpose after its usefulness as a flag has ended would be considered desecration, even if not punishable by law as a public offense. It should never become a dust rag or a part of patchwork or serve any other use thereafter, in the general opinion of those who would pay it proper honor.

None of the flags whipped to ribbons in the breeze from the staffs over the treasury building ever has been destroyed. They have been carefully folded and put into storage under the regime of Chief Clerk Wilmeth. Reluctant to destroy them, the necessity may some day confront him as custodian of the building, and he will destroy them by fire.

In the navy and the coast guard regulations require that useless flags be destroyed by fire. This regulation is strictly enforced.—Washington Star.

Lubrication Saves.

You may ask why it is if the lubricant is supposed to prevent contact the surfaces should ever wear out. If run without a lubricant your motor would be ruined in five minutes. If properly lubricated it should run five years. If no gritty matter became mixed with the oil it might reasonably be expected to last more than twice as long. The lubricating system should therefore continuously replace the film of oil on every bearing or sliding surface as fast as it is worn out.—Professor Richard A. Leavitt in American Farming.

Music.

There is something marvelous in music. I might almost say that music is in itself a marvel. Its position is somewhere between the region of thought and that of phenomena, a glimmering medium between mind and matter, related to both and yet differing from either, spiritual and yet requiring rhythm, material and yet independent of space.—Heinrich Heine.

Papier Mache.

Papier mache is made chiefly from old paper by boiling to a pulp with water, pressing, mixed with glue or starch paste and then forcing in a mold previously oiled. After drying the articles made with this compound are soaked with linseed oil and then dried at a higher temperature.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Counterfeiter

By JOHN TURNLEE

John Roelf, detective, was called upon by the manager of the Third National bank to ferret out the perpetrators of spurious ten dollar bills on their bank. He began by making a thorough examination of the bills. It would seem that a good engraver could make a duplicate of any bank bill that would be practically perfect. But no matter how much care he puts on it there will be differences. On these bills there was a miniature likeness of the then secretary of the treasury. There was a difference betw en the valid and spurious pictures in the right nostril, the left eyebrow and a line running between the nose and the left cheek.

But this was of no moment to the detective except to enable him to spot one of the counterfeits when he saw it. It did not help him in running down the counterfeiter. He knew that certain persons were going about buying articles worth various sums from 50 cents to $2 or $3, offering one of the counterfeit ten dollar bills and receiving the change in good money.

Roelf interviewed several of the persons on whom these spurious bills had been passed—a young woman cashier in an ice cream saloon. She said that a young man had brought in a girl, ordering ice cream, cake and other articles for both of them; had paid for what he bought with a ten dollar bill and received $9.15 change. After the departure of the couple the bill was found to be counterfeit.

The only person who saw this young man and woman was the cashier herself, who waited on them, no other person connected with the saloon being present, but her description tallied with that of others—that is, the description of the young man, for this was the only time he was reported in company with a girl.

Roelf gave a telephone number to the proprietors of a certain store on the main shopping street of the town and asked them, if any one passed the spurious bills, to call him up and hold on to the person who had offered it. Then he took a novel, sat down by the instrument, read and waited.

On the third day of his waiting he was rung up from a cigar store. A young man had called, bought a handful of cigars, offered a counterfeit ten dollar bill, received $8 and some silver in change, lighted a cigar and gone out smoking. The proprietor had telephoned Roelf and sent a boy to shadow the young man. Roelf went to the cigar store, and when the boy returned he showed the detective a house which the young man had entered.

Roelf remembered that there were different possibilities connected with this young man. The bill might have been passed on him, he being entirely innocent of the matter. He might be passing the bills for the maker. The house he entered might be in no way connected with the counterfeiting. It might be the place where the bills were made. It behooved Roelf, therefore, to be careful in his investigations lest he either come down on innocent persons or frighten the counterfeiters away with all their paraphernalia.

What he did was to observe the house. He loitered near it for half a day to see who came from and went to it. No one entered it, but a woman came out.

The usual way for detectives to watch a suspected house is to hire a room opposite. Roelf did this and kept close observation on the house the young man had entered. Within a few days another case of passing the bills was reported to him. A young man—very likely the same person as before—had bought a hat with one of them. The bill had been detected, the purchaser had been followed and had entered the house Roelf was watching.

This removed all doubt that the guilty person occupied the house in question. Roelf made arrangements to raid it, but concluded to get what additional information he was able before doing so. He kept up his watch, but the only person he saw come out or go in was a young girl. It seemed to Roelf that there was something familiar to him about her, but he could not tell what it was. He never caught a fair glimpse of her face, for whenever she emerged from the house, if the weather was fair, she put up a parasol and if it rained an umbrella.

Roelf now gave orders among the shops that if any one passed one of the spurious bills and it was detected before the person passing it got away he was to be detained. If this was not possible Roelf was to be telephoned of the fact and he would arrest the counterfeiter if he returned to the house.

One afternoon he received a telephone that a young man of effeminate appearance had entered a drug store, bought a pair of hairbrushes and passed a counterfeit bill. Roelf went out on the street and walked back and forth for some time, when he saw a young man who answered the description of the counterfeiter making for the suspected house. As he was about to enter Roelf clapped a hand on his shoulder with a gruff "I want you."

He was startled by a shriek such as might come from a woman.

And it did. When the person arrested was brought to face accusers she turned out to be the cashier of the ice cream saloon who claimed to have had one of the counterfeit bills passed upon her.

Joffre's Inspiration.

Marshal Joffre, idol of France, says a soldier must play as well as fight, or he is not a good soldier, just as civilians must rest and play to be most efficient in their work. Nor is this doctrine applied merely to the bomb throwers and trench defenders, but it is put into practice by the field marshal himself, and by the French army chiefs all down the line.

Marshall Joffre believes the green-hedged bands and the shady shores of the rivers of France afford a cure for all ills and, since he has seen America, he is sure that the placid streams and lakes of Canada hold a healing power to the value of which Canadians will some day awake.

The hero of the Marne is, in fact, what Canadians would call a "motor-boat bug." In the shadows of a bridge which spans the Seine near Paris lies an unpretentious house-boat with screened deck-houses and runways, exactly like thousands in America. Swinging lazily in the stream beside it is a small motor-boat. It is here that Joffre goes for rest and relaxation after strenuous periods of duty, and he has expressed the wish that when peace comes he may be permitted to find rest and peace touring the picturesque rivers and canals of France on board this floating home.

Military Marching Tunes.

Considerable interest attaches to the origin of regimental marching tunes. Because during the Peninsular War the Forty-Fifth Sherwood Foresters marched all night across country by moonlight in order to be present at the storming of Badajos, they now, says a writer in The Regiment, march past to the tune of "The Young May Moon," and the Cheshires glory in the air "Wha Wadna Fight for Charlie?" in memory of the gallant stand they made at the battle of Miani under the leadership of Sir Charles Napier, when it was the only British corps engaged. Again, the "Minden March" commemorates the bravery of the Second Lancashire Fusiliers at the battle of Minden. This was fought on Lammas Day, and the then bandmaster in consequence ingeniously arranged the present march from an old hymn tune named "Lammas." The Second Queens march past today to what was the music of the Portuguese National Anthem two hundred and fifty years ago.

ANY user will tell you that Michelin Universals give remarkable mileage. Why? Because these unequalled tires contain more quality rubber and fabric.

Prove this by weighing a Michelin in comparison with other non-skids. You will find the Michelin from 12 to 15% heavier than the average.

STOCK MARKET

Union Stock Yards, Sept. 6.—Receipts, 24 cars, with 236 cattle, 61 calves, 399 hogs, and 299 sheep.

Despite the fact that the local live stock market experienced the lightest run of hogs seen on a Thursday in nearly a score of years, prices held firm to yesterday's quotation of $18.25 fed. There is only a fair demand for hogs at this figure because of a disposition on the part of packers to believe that prices will drop again before much more water flows under the bridge. In the past three days Chicago prices for the little animals have eased off 90 cents on the hundredweight, and in Montreal hog prices are said to be about 50 cents cheaper.

GOOD ROADS ARE COSTLY.

But Bad Roads Are More Expensive in the Long Run.

Highway engineering has become a highly developed art, and good road making materials are plentiful. Consequently there is absolutely no excuse for a modern road to "go wrong" within its first four or five seasons of use unless petty graft and local politics can be considered as sufficient excuses.

It is not enough that the surface of the road be composed of the proper materials. These materials must rest on a firm foundation which extends to a sufficient depth below the surface to withstand the effect of the frozen ground on either side. Furthermore, the surface must be waterproof in order to prevent the entrance of rain or melted snow, which when frozen will separate and disintegrate the best laid foundation. Also the road surface and gutters must be so constructed that the highway will automatically drain itself of all water. This serves the purpose of automatic flushing and accounts for the continuous clean swept appearance of the well designed and properly constructed roadway.

A properly constructed highway is expensive, but it is an asset too obvious for argument. Too often, however, the first cost represents the deciding factor in the selection of a certain type of construction, and the upkeep cost is overlooked. It is this attitude on the part of the town or county taxpayers or road commissioners, coupled with graft and politics on the part of the contractor, which accounts for a large part of the improved roads which need to be reconstructed each year.—H. W. Slauson in Leslie's.

War Films.

War films, says the Boston Transcript, have proved to be very useful in modern warfare. Used only as an experiment at first, they have been of such practical value that the return of the cinematograph operator from his aerial reconnoissance is always impatiently awaited at headquarters.

The moving picture man who volunteers for this work undertakes a very difficult and daring feat. He must be a master of his profession, have nerves of steel and be willing to take great risks. More often than not he is obliged to fly at a low altitude, for otherwise his pictures would be without value. Many men who have gone out on those perilous expeditions have never returned.

The war films show the experienced observer a great deal that is going on behind the enemy's lines. The trenches are clearly visible. It is even possible to discern the men digging trenches or placing big guns in position. The cinematograph men have often brought back excellent pictures taken from waterplanes that show the movement of ships and the track of enemy periscopes.

He Couldn't Stand Prosperity.

Thomas A. Edison once said of a man in his employ:

"His executive ability was greater than that of any other man I have yet seen. His memory was prodigious, conversation laconic and movements rapid. He disappeared one day, and although I sent men everywhere it was likely he could be found, he was not discovered. After two weeks he came into the factory in a terrible condition as to clothing and face. He sat down and, turning to me, said: 'Edison, it's no use; this is the third time. I can't stand prosperity. Put my salary back and give me a job.' I was very sorry to learn it was whisky that had spoiled such a promising career. I gave him an inferior job and kept him for a long time."—Collier's Weekly.

How to Please Your Employer.

To please your employer show that you have a little spirit. Make it clear to him that you do not wish to be imposed upon. He will admire that in you. If he asks you to work most of the time you're at the office or to do a little something extra you say, "What do you think I am?" Tell him he knows what he can do with the job if he doesn't like the way you handle it. He will admire your spunk. If he sneaks in and catches you loafing tell him you're only human. Maybe he will then give you a raise. Then again he may only give you a boot.

Very Telling.

"Your friend Mrs. Gaddy has rather a downright manner, hasn't she?"

"I must say she has some telling ways."

Do not judge of the style [illegible]

SLANG OF THE AIR.

British Aviators Have Code of Language All Their Own.

The war in the air is evolving a new language of its own. Already many quaint and peculiar words are in use among airmen, notes a writer in London Answers, and the list is being added to daily.

No airman ever thinks of talking about a flight, for example. Flip is the word he uses. And his flips are always of a certain duration, not of a certain distance. He flips about for an hour, say, not for so many miles, or, rather, knots.

The late Flight-Lieutenant Harold Rosher, whose book, "In the Royal Naval Air Service," is generally acknowledged to provide the most intimate and illuminating insight into the human side of war flying yet published, gives some choice examples of sky slang.

There is spikeboxzle, for instance. Writing of an air plane chase after a zeppelin, he remarked: "Two machines went up to spikeboxzle him." Many learned professors of English might have given years of study and thought, and yet have failed to create a word so peculiarly expressive and meaningful as spikeboxzle in connection with zeppelin straffing.

Huffed, meaning got killed, is another characteristic airmen's word which Lieutenant Rosher has given to the public at large; but he omitted to mention the phrase, "He hasn't come back for his cap," which has the same melancholy significance.

This phrase originated at a certain big school for training naval airpilots. Before a man "took the air" it was customary for him to hang his peaked service cap on one of a long line of pegs. When a pilot crashed, or had some other unfortunate mishap, he did not, of course, come back for his cap, and hence the origin of the saying.

Another now common expression which came from the same school is hickboo. Hickboo means a good many things, but chiefly that enemy aircraft are about. If zeppelins or taubes are on their way, a hickboo is "on." Anything, in fact, which is calculated to put the wind up the timid is a hickboo. The word is really a distortion of an Indian word, meaning an eagle.

Stunt is one of the most frequently used words in the Air Service. Doing stunts includes all manner of things—looping the loop, indulging in daring banking and nose-diving, landing in a new and original way, and so on—and a flying-machine is never anything but a 'bus. Small airships are blimps, however.

To borrow or steal anything belonging to another is to hotstuff it; and in the Naval Air Service all carpenters are chippies.

A flying officer who gets promotion is said to have shipped another stripe, and leave is referred to as a spot of leave.

It is curious that flying men, being so fertile in the invention of new words, should not as yet have hit upon any generally-popular term for themselves.

At present they are airmen, not birdmen, or sky-pilots, or aviators, or any of the other fancy names which certain ingenious persons attempt to foist upon them.

The Hawaiian Language.

The language of Hawaii is very simple. To one who hears it for the first time comes the conviction that the aborigines expressed their sentiments in primitive vowel sounds, to which some consonants have been added. Each vowel is sounded as in Latin, and the words are easily pronounced by one who is patient and wishes to speak distinctly. The pronunciation will be all the better if the speaker will draw out, almost drawl, the vowel sounds, for which reason the language is well suited to the doleful Hawaiian wail. Say Hoo-noo-luu-lu and let the word sing itself.

Jam For Breakfast.

People who like to eat pastry or other irregular dishes for breakfast should be consoled to learn that no less a man than Herbert Spencer ate strawberry jam at his morning meal. He did it to avoid monotony, believing that digestion was best served by keeping the stomach entertained with variety. He is said to have told of a man who went into a decline from a too steady diet of mutton chops.

Russia's Resources.

Russia is a country of vast resources, many of them undeveloped. They raise great quantities of wheat, rye and oats, and hemp and flax are extensively cultivated. They raise a great amount of live stock, while the Oldorski and Ural mountains contain very great mineral riches, and Russia is now the largest producer of petroleum in the world. There is an inexhaustible amount of coal in Russia.

TRIAL AMONG THE BANTUS

Weird Methods Followed by Witch Doctors With Accused.

Before the white man came the Bantus of the Congo had their own government. The chief was the important individual and often he was a czar of the most autocratic type. The power of life and death was his and very often he exacted the death penalty for the slightest offense. On the death of a chief the position usually passed to a nephew, not to the chief's son. The burial of a chief was an important event. His garb may have been scant during life but he must have plenty of cloth to be buried in. And a great man such as he must not go unattended into the spirit-world, so very often his wives were buried alive with him, while some slaves had their heads struck off over the newly filled grave that their spirits might attend their chief.

When an evil deed occurred the witch doctor was called in to decide if anybody was bewitched. With body daubed with white clay and red camwood powder, and wearing skins and feathers until he looked like the most fantastic picture of his Satanic Majesty, he would appear suddenly amongst the assembled natives, performing a wild dance with weird incantations, moving in and out amongst the people until he would suddenly stand before the one possessed of the witch. He was supposed to have the power of smelling blood upon the guilty person. Sometimes the one really guilty was pointed out, the information having been secured before the ordeal by shrewd inquiries on the part of the witch doctor; but quite often someone in disfavor with the chief or an important person in the village was selected as the victim. Trial by poison usually followed. The poison was drunk, and if the individual lived he was innocent; if he died he surely must have been guilty. To such an extent did the giving of poison prevail that at one time it was estimated that about a million people in Africa died each year in this way.

A Matter of Change.

"What a change a woman can make in a man's life!" sighed the very young man.

"Right you are, my boy," sighed the scanty haired man who had been up against the matrimonial game for many years, "and what a lot of change she requires while doing it!"

Puffed Up.

Post—Thinks he's the whole thing, doesn't he? Parker—Well, I'd hardly go as far as that, but he certainly considers himself a quorum.—Smart Set.

Ropes Made of Human Hair.

In building the Nishi Hongwanji temple of Japan the heavy beams of the roof were hoisted into place with ropes made of human hair.

No one can have peace longer than his neighbor pleases.—Dutch Proverb.

Italian Assault On The Austrian Lines Is Now Becoming Decisive

Confident Report From Italian Headquarters--More Prisoners Were Taken Yesterday--German Raids in Vicinity of Armentieres and Near Lens Are Repulsed Field Marshal Haig Announces--No Material Change on Russian Front.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

ROME, September 7.—Italian pressure against the Austrians in the region northeast of Gorizia is becoming decisive, the War Office announced to-day. The enemy has suffered extremely heavy losses for several days in his desperate resistance.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

ROME, September 7.—The official statements says: Yesterday three officers and 201 men were made prisoners on the Carso. The bitter fighting of the past few days has been followed by local actions for rectifying the line and by intense bombardments.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, September 7.—"Hostile raids were successfully repulsed in the vicinity of Armentieres and near Lens," says to-day's official statement.

"North of Frezenberg the enemy delivered two strong counter attacks against positions we gained in local attacks and compelled our detachments to withdraw to their own line. During the night our troops rushed a hostile post west of Queant and captured machine guns. The enemy artillery was active near Lens."

PARIS, September 7.—Violent artillery fighting occurred last night on the Champagne and Verdun fronts, says to-day's official announcement.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, September 7.—The resignation of the Ribot Ministry was decided upon unanimously after the cabinet meeting this morning. President Poincare has asked the Premier and Ministers to withhold their resignations until the presidential election and the Chamber of Deputies reassembles in Paris.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

BIRKENHEAD, September 7.—Lloyd George in his speech said that the news from Russia in the last few days had not been good. He thought when the revolution came that it would have the effect of postponing victory, but he had expected an earlier recovery. However, through it all we must exercise the patience headed.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, September 7.—No enemy vessels other than submarines have been observed in the Gulf of Riga, the War Office announces. Russian naval forces are ready eo engage the Germans. There was no material change yesterday in the Riga region, the statement says. Encounters occurred between the Russian rearguards and advance cavalry of the Germans.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, September 7.—The Germans yesterday made an aerial attack upon American hospitals occupied by St. Louis and Harward contingents, situated in a coast village, killing one officer of the United States Army Medical Corps and wounding three others severely. Two of the rank and file were killed and sixteen wounded, five of the latter being Americans.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, Thursday—The newspapers to-day report that the Government has decided to exile abroad as a result of the recent exposure of the counter-revolutionary plot, Grand Duke Nicholas Alexandrovitch, Grand Duke Paul, Mme. Virubova, confidant of former Empress Alexandria, Former Minister of the Interior Khvostov, and Former Palace Commandant General Voyeikoff, Former Premier Sturmer's secretary. The notorious Manasscvitch Manuilov, was sent abroad yesterday.

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

LONDON, September 7.—Germany may be preparing to turn her battle fleet to the job of blasting the Russian fleet and bombard Petrograd.

If Germany chooses, she can concentrate a big squadron for a sea drive on Russia. The Kiel Canal would permit transfer of any necessary ships now in North Sea German ports into the Baltic.

Two great Russian naval depots and fortresses guard the capital. They are Reval, close to the mouth of the Gulf, and Kronstadt, only a score of miles from Petrograd. The Gulf itself has been thickly sown with mines. Part of the Russian fleet is known to be at Reval. It is so far outranked by the German fleet, however, that it is doubtful if it could impede any formidable squadron.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

NEW YORK, September 7.—A special cable to the Sun from London, under yesterday's date says: "The most intense aerial activity that has been seen at any time since war began is in progress on both sides of the western front. It is taken here to mean the possible approach of a turning point in strategy. While trench warfare continues in some areas, both the British and French staffs says its days as a dominating factor in the situation are numbered. Two years ago the leaders of both armies were speculating how to get the armies safely out of the trenches. Apparently this problem has been solved by the slow development of events instead of by the supreme genius of any Napoleonic commander. Under the present system there is no longer any sharp line of demarcation between the opposing forces. Instead they are scattered apparently in a promiscuous way over a wide belt of country. Shell holes, fortified, concealed posts, and concrete "pill boxes" are taking the place of trenches.

The new type of warfare is regarded as especially favourable to the Allies, because it gives wider play to the individuality and initiative of the soldiers and minor officers, in which the English, French and Americans are much superior to the Germans.

A Big Blouse Special

Mr. Chesler has just returned from a most successful buying trip, made especially to secure a stock of Ladies' Waists that by personal selection and close buying, he would be able to sell at less than all competitors. He succeeded beyond his expectations, but had to purchase a very large and varied stock to get the favourable price. The waists are now here, and will be priced for quick clearance at much less than other stores can buy them. In addition to the present purchase, Mr. Chesler made a connection with several of the largest Canadian manufacturers in the waist industry, to keep him supplied with a weekly shipment of up-to-date waists at the same low prices. See the list of a few of the specials in the advertisement on another page. For all needs in the waist line, be sure to come to B. Chesler, 289 George street, New Lundy Block.

PETROGRAD IS PREPARING FOR GERMAN ATTACK

Riga's Fall Electrified the Russian Capital, Proving a Powerful Impetus to Patriotic Sentiment and Inspiring Determination to Fight

KERENSKY IS CHEERED

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

(By William G. Shepherd, U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

PETROGRAD, Sept. 7.—Petrograd is preparing for a possible German attack. Red placards scattered everywhere on the walls and buildings today called on all Russians to do their duty. Troops are passing through the streets en route to the front to repel the invaders, but the populace remains quiet and apparently unworried and no panic is visible. Riga's fall electrified the city. It was not the shock of fear, however, but rather a powerful impetus to patriotic sentiment inspiring the determination to fight. Regiments which yesterday passed in review before Premier Kerensky as they entrained for the front where the Germans are now battering forward, drew a tremendous ovation from the Petrograd populace. Kerensky himself was cheered to the echo by the troops and the crowds. Public attention to-day is centred more on the wholesale arrests of the Provisional government in the counter revolutionary plot, than on the prosepect of the Germans reaching Petrograd. The popular belief that the conspiracy was that of the monarchists, was supported in the arrest of two grand dukes already announced.

One other report circulated to-day was that the wife of the Grand Duke Jean Constantinovitch, son of the former Czar's uncle, the Grand Duke Constantine, had been implicated in the plot and taken into custody. She was formerly the Princess Helene of Serbia.

MONTREAL WOMEN PLEASED

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

MONTREAL, Sept. 7. — Montreal women in general seem well pleased with that section of the franchise bill that has to do with votes for women. Some think that the measure could well be made more extensive so as to take in those who have no near relatives at the front, but who are doing their part in the successful prosecution of the war by working in munition factories, nursing, Red Cross work and the like. There is no suffrage association among the French women of Montreal, so it was impossible to get an official expression from them. It is presumed, however, they are opposed to the measure.

SUBMARINES CAN NOT BEAT DOWN BRITISH

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

BIRKENHEAD, Eng., September 7.—Premier Lloyd George in a speech here to-day, on receiving the freedom of the city, declared that the whole Allied cause and the freedom of the world depends on supremacy at sea and that he was certain it would be maintained. German statesmen, he said, had been at great pains to impress upon their people that the submarine figures given out by him in the House of Commons recently were inaccurate. He declared these figures were absolutely correct, and that they put an end to all hopes of the enemy to win. The Premier asserted he was absolutely convinced that the German submarine never would be able to beat down the strength of the British Empire, or beat down the hopes of the alliance by means of all the efforts the Germans could make with the submarine.

PTE. G. E. MANLEY OF 93rd BATTALION IS REPORTED MISSING

Pte. P. J. Fitzgerald Whose Brother Was Announced as Wounded a Few Days Ago is Reported Suffering From Gas Poisoning---To-day's General Military News.

WOUNDED.

Pte. George Ernest Manley, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, Peterborough.

GASSED.

Pte. Allan Perckersgill, Infantry, Norwood.

GAS POISONING.

Pte. P J. Fitzgerald, Infantry, Douro township.

PTE. G. E. MANLEY

The official casualty lists from Ottawa contain the name of Pte. Geo. Ernest Manley of Peterborough who is officially reported as missing. Pte. Manley enlisted in the 93rd Battalion in September of 1915 shortly after recruiting commenced for the Peterborough County unit. After going overseas with the 93rd Battalion he was transferred to another Canadian battalion at the front.

PTE. P. J. FITZGERALD.

Mr. Patrick Fitzgerald of Douro has received an official message from Ottawa on Monday, Sept. 3rd, stating that his son, Pte. P. J. Fitzgerald had been admitted to a field hospital on August 23rd, suffering from gas poison, but had returned to regimental duty again. Pte. Fitzgerald is a member of the 46th Battalion. His brother, Pte. T. J. Fitzgerald, who went overseas with the 93rd Battalion, is at present in the Royal Herbert Hospital, England, suffering from wounds inflicted in the battle of Lens on August 15th.

Flight Lieut. George C. Logan, of the Royal Flying Corps, cabled to-day to his family, 14 Murray street, announcing his safe arrival in London, England.

OTTAWA, Sept. 6.—Major-General W. E. Hodgins, Acting Adjutant-General, Headquarters Staff, Ottawa, is vacating his post to accept an appointment on the Overseas Demobilization Committee as representative of the Militia Department. He has been selected for this important post on account of his long connection with the militia as Acting Adjutant-General during the present war, dealing with all problems relating to organization, personnel, discipline, etc.

General Hodgins has had thirty-five years' experience in the Canadian Militia, and has had the following staff service:

Officer Commanding Ottawa Brigade, 1902; District Officer Commanding Military District No. 4, 1903; District No. 1, 1909; Officer Commanding 1st Divisional Area, 1911; Acting Adjutant-General Headquarters Staff, 1915. Major-General S. C. Mewburn will succeed Major-General Hodgins as Acting Adjutant-General at Headquarters.

The Kingston Whig says:

A new order has been issued from Ottawa which will be of great interest to the returned soldiers of the city and district. It means that there will be no more scandals about pay being held up through the over-use or red tape. There will be money at the end of every two weeks for every returned soldier even though his documents have not come to Canada.

Since men have been returning from overseas there has been the greatest amount of dissatisfaction over the paying system. In England and France every man carries his pocket bank book in which is recorded the payments made to him while on service.

In Canada, when the men have returned they have found that the document known as the "last pay certificate" has been the cause of all the trouble. This is balanced when the men leave England, for Canada. The credit balance to the man is shown in it. The authorities here have been acting on an order that no money should be paid until the last pay certificate for the man concerned, has arrived. This, due to the enormous work at the War Office has been delayed in some cases for months and months.

During these months the men have had to walk the streets of the city without any prospect of securing pocket money until the papers arrive showing the total amount to which the country is indebted to them.

The order covers this by stating that every man may be given a small allowance at the end of every two weeks pending the arrival of the last pay certificate. These few dollars are then taken off the balance due to the man when the documents arrive and the total to date is balanced up.

The crying need of such a reform has been in evidence for some time. Representations were made to the Government, and the new order will overcome the trouble.

LONDON, Sept. 6.—In consequence of the complaints of soldiers failing to salute while on leave traveling, a strict order is issued from Canadian headquarters that all soldiers, including convalescents, must salute officers on street railway, in shops, cafes, or while sitting down. The salute is obligatory if the soldiers are with females.

LONDON, Sept. 6.—The Canadian Press understands that arrangements are pending for the return to Canada together of soldiers unfit for further service and their wives. Many men have married since their arrival in England, and some of their wives have never been in Canada. Women, under the present conditions, are only permitted to sail in frequent intervals. Men awaiting return to Canada at Buxton, have applied for permission to remain there till their wives are able to sail simultaneously.

Ottawa, September 6. — The Dominion Government has not decided upon a 60 per cent. increase in pensions to meet the increase in the cost of living. Sir Thomas White, in the Commons to-day drew attention to a despatch from Toronto, quoting officials of the Great War Veterans' Association as stating that they had received assurances from the Cabinet to that effect.

"I desire to say that there is no foundation for the report in question," said the Finance Minister.

"The amount of the increase in pensions has not been determined, and no intimation or statement has been given or made by the government respecting such an increase."

KINGSTON, Sept. 6.—The applications of Capt. W. Kent MacNee and Capt. W. J. S. Sharpe to be allowed to return overseas have been refused by the military authorities. It is understood that Capt. MacNee will be detailed for duty with the munitions guard at Trenton. Capt. W. J. S. Sharpe, 21st Battalion, is to be appointed casualty officer of Military District No. 3, to take the position vacated by Major T. A. Kidd, now D.A.A. and Q.M.G. Capt. Sharpe returned from the front several months ago, and since then has been on the instructional staff here

Canadians Surprise Enemy by Early Morning Assault, Making Further Advances in the Lens District.

FOE'S HEAVY LOSSES

(By Stewart Lyon)

(Special Correspondent of the Canadian Press).

Canadian Headquarters in France. (via London), Sept. 6.—Another of the small surprise attacks with almost nightly reduce the area within Lens still remaining in the enemy's hands took place at three-thirty this (Thursday) morning, and resulted in the capture of a row of houses occupied by four companies of the First Regiment, First Guard Reserve Division. Men from British Columbia, accustomed in civil life to finding their way about, did the work and did it well, sustaining few casualties themselves, while inflicting a considerable number on the enemy. The affair had some uncommon features, which serve to show how shrewdly our men carry on warfare among the ruined houses of Lens.

A few days ago our outposts were advanced without the enemy learning that the advance had been made. The men lay, perdu, in cellars during the day, and by night, aided by bright moonlight, watched the houses across the street, so that they might learn the habits of the enemy. The latter, as a precautionary measure, threw some bombs cross the street into the houses occupied by our men, but failed to [illegible] and considered that the houses were empty, and did not even send over a patrol to verify this assumption. With the utmost care a stock of bombs was accumulated, and machine guns were brought up and put in position to command the back doors of the houses.

A bit of unexpected luck also came our way. The enemy had a relief last night, and companies entirely unfamiliar with the locality came into the line. There was a heavy rain storm, accompanied by thunder, about 3 o'clock and the newcomers, in fancied security, went to sleep in their cellars, leaving but few men on guard.

Without any preliminary bombarding, the British Columbians, at half-past three, scrambled out of their cellars, each provided with an ample supply of bombs. They had only to cross the street to find a clear window of a cellar occupied by the enemy and throw bombs down among the occupants. A few of them, chiefly men on guard in the upper part, escaped by promptly surrendering but many must have been asleep when the bombs burst around them. The row of houses thus bombed extends for about three hundred yards.

While this operation was in progress, another group of bombers cleared and occupied a portion of an enemy trench leading toward Green Grassier. Here the Germans were alert and full of fight. They came back thrice in determined counter-attacks, notwithstanding serious losses, and in one of their assaults got a footing again in the trench. Finally, after over an hour of bombing, the trench remained in our hands, and a block was put in to keep the enemy to his own end of it.

Prisoners say the position of the enemy in Lens is desperate and their losses from our artillery fire heavy.

GREAT BRITAIN MUST FIGHT ON FOR REAL PEACE

German Militarism Must Be Crushed Sufficiently to Make Fresh Aggression by Her Impossible, Says Sir Edward Carson

TO PUT AN END TO WAR

Canadian Press Despatch.

LONDON, Sept. 7.— Coincidentally with the announcement that Premier Lloyd George will deliver an important speech on the war aims of the Allies at Birkenhead to-day, Sir Edward Carson declares to-day: "There is a great deal of very loose and mischievous talk about peace. Home people seem to imagine we have only to conclude a treaty with Germany and all will be well, but I should like to ask what is to happen? Are the nations of the world to proceed with preparations for the next conflict—to pursue their researches in science, to the expansion and creation of still more deadly weapons of warfare?

Sir Edward then quotes the German Emperor as saying there is no International law, that treaties are scraps of paper and so forth, and adds: "I have not yet seen a single suggestion made as to how in future these calamities are to be prevented from re-occurring if the lawless temper of the Germans remains unrepentant and their power to repeat their crimes remains what it has been in the past. Whatever terms Germany might now bring herself to accept in order to recuperate her strength for another aggression her people would soon forget the economy and privations they have had to endure and would remain convinced they proved themselves invincible."

Sir Edward asserted that if this war is to put an end to all war, German militarism must be sufficiently crushed to make fresh aggression by her impossible for a long time to come, "and until it is no longer possible for the German people themselves to be deluded by the legend of their invincibility in arms."

In conclusion Sir Edward said that it was obvious that Great Britain must carry on the war until such victory is attained as will remove all practical danger of war in future. "And any man who tries, whatsoever his motive be, to distract attention of the country from this goal of deliverance, is the worst enemy of real peace."

THE WEATHER

The early riser this morning had the opportunity of seeing the first heavy white frost of the season. The thermometer stood at 35 degrees, and altogether there was a decided tang of winter in the atmosphere. White frost is usually followed by rain.

Card of Thanks

The B. F. Ackerman, Son and Company, Limited, wish to take this means of cordially thanking the ratepayers of the city for their hearty support of the by-law to grant the company a fixed assessment on their premises and plant of their new shoe factory; and to all those who in any way contributed to the result.

The company on its part will strive to do everything in its power to justify the support and confidence of the people as expressed.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

FRIDAY, SEPT. 7, 1917

THE ACKERMAN BY-LAW

The large majority of 555 out of a total of 971 votes polled for the Ackerman Shoe Factory by-law, indicates that the ratepayers of Peterborough appreciate the importance of adding to our industrial establishments. The voting showed that the feeling in favour of maintaining and increasing our creditable list of manufacturing establishments was general, a majority for the by-law having been cast in every one of the twenty-two polling subdivisions, except one.

The result of the voting shows that the people desirous of helping build up the city and contribute to the making of a Greater Peterborough are prepared by the exhibition of a laudable public spirit, to sanction measures that involve a little sacrifice, though in this case the effect upon the rate of civic taxation is hardly appreciable.

In another way the vote will be another evidence, that Peterborough welcomes new industries and holds a generous attitude towards them. This will show industries seeking a location or a new location, that Peterborough is a good place to pitch upon, a place where they will be sure to find a more or less substantial welcome and fair and generous treatment.

This circumstance throws a responsibility upon our rulers, in the way of making Peterborough a pleasant place to live in, as well as to do business in: to make the city as clean and sanitary and attractive as is possible; to maintain good streets, to make and keep beautiful our parks and public places; to plant more street trees, especially in the newer sections; to make our streets so pleasant and attractive that residents—new residents, especially—will take a pride in them and be encouraged to help maintain and add to their beauty and attractiveness. It would be wise—a splendid investment—for the authorities to help make living here ideal as far as possible; go provide needed sanitary aids such as public and supervised bathing places, supervised play grounds, music in the parks and other things that are necessary to make Peterborough sought and appreciated, both as a good place to do business in and a pleasant place to live in—a desirable place for work as well as play.

The Greater Peterborough Association is equipped with committees sufficient to cover every requirement of making the city greater—to secure all-round improvements in all our conditions. In this respect there is no one need; there are many needs to be met to insure the equipment of the city to make it attractive in an all-round sense—equipment in the interests of the pay-roll, of the bank account, in the interests of health and wholesome recreation and pleasure."

It isn't a moment to early to think of acting to make the Peterborough Central Exhibition a success.

PREMATURE "PRODUCTION."

A local grocer asks the Examiner to call attention to the unwisdom and waste of killing for meat young or immature pigs, "shoats" under, or a little over 100 pounds. Of course, it needs no argument to show the folly and waste of this practice. We are urged to practice economy and there is no economy in killing animals, that without proportionate expense in care and feeding will in a few weeks or months have from fifty to seventy-five per cent added to their food value and selling value. With a general avoidance of the folly of premature slaughter of pigs, the sum total of pork products throughout the Dominion would be vastly increased — increased production is the call and duty of the hour.

To illustrate the waste and unwisdom of premature killing of pigs—an Otonabee farmer nar the city has eight partially grown pigs for which he has refused $290—$25 a-piece. He considers it wise to hold them; for, he says, they will increase in weight and value as much in two months as they have done since they were born—a gain, he estimates of fifty per cent., in bulk and value. This is both good business and good patriotism—profit to the breeder and increase in the stock of exportable meats.

Our food controller should take the lesson to heart. In permitting the unrestricted use of lamb and veal, to save beef and bacon, he encourages the premature and unprofitable destruction of our future stock of beef animals and wool producers; and does violence to the common-sense practice of the Otonabee farmer who is literally living up to the government injunction and entreaty, to produce and save, something the government, through the food controller, is violating whole sale.

Premier Borden is to "take to the tall timbers" —not in the depreciatory sense of the slangist — a despatch states that "Sir Robert Borden will take a brief holiday in the woods before returning to the House."

ORGANIZATION AND SYSTEM.

There seems to be a little friction —probably not so much friction as misunderstanding—between the chairman of the Board of Works and the City Engineer. Such misunderstandings are almost inevitable, in a case where there is not clear definition of the duties and responsibilities of both.

Such misunderstandings would virtually disappear or be rendered highly improbable with a proper-organization of the Board of Works Department. It is properly organized as regards personnel, but there seems to be existent no definite policy of procedure, nor well understood and clearly thought out principle of plan in dealing with the important and complex duties of the Board of Works.

It seems that if the city council should set itself to the work of thoroughly organizing the Board of Works and devising a comprehensive policy of action, provide for strict definition of the duties of the officials of each branch of street work; provide for avoidance of overlapping of the work of one in respect of another and, in fine, if system instead of haphazard action, were provided, we would have smoother working of the department, and better value for the expenditure of the more or less sufficient appropriations available.

Organization and system, so complete and so perfect in military matters, are the indispensable conditions of efficiency. No business—no large business—can hope to succeed, or even tries to succeed, without organization and system, and municipal business cannot be at its best without organization and system.

The Canadian National Exhibition owes its great success to thorough organization and coordination of the enthusiasm of its several managing heads.

POTATOES.

The national obedience to the greater production call has met with a splendid response, and in no thing so markedly as potatoes. According to all indications and reports, the yield of potatoes in this country will be the greatest in its history. This very abundance presents two problems. One is disposing of our surplus stock at reasonable prices. Mr. F. B. Carvell, M.P., in the House suggested that the government as a war measure, apply to potatoes the principle of free entry of wheat and wheat products into the United States market. Mr. Carvell pointed out that there was an enormous crop of potatoes in Central Canada where our principal market is, and his request, to which Sir Robert Borden promised consideration, was that potatoes also be placed on the free list, "so that we may have the advantage of selling our potatoes in the United States markets," an important thing if, as is a possibility, potatoes should become a drag on the home market.

Another problem is that of satisfactory housing, for the winter, our big local crop. One alderman suggested that, in view of lack of cellarage for storing the crop, the Council join the band of cold storage bandits and secure a brewery building as a cold storage plant. This would be a good plan in one way, and quite consistent with the paternalism upon which the municipal coal yard is founded; but it would increase cost by a double bill for cartage.

It is suggested that the practice of pioneer days, when cellars were scarce, and even the practice of recent and present days—that of pitting potatoes, should be revived. This "pitting" as it is called, is not always "pitting." It is easily done, and permits of storing and saving potatoes The process is: pile the potatoes on the ground on which they are grown. The process is: pile the potatoes on some suitable spot — avoiding low ground liable to be flooded. The pile, carefully made, either circular or oblong, should be brought to a point at the top. Cover it with straw or clean litter of any kind. Then with earth from a trench, dig around the base of the pit, cover the straw to a reasonable depth and finish the crest of the pile with a piece of tough sod to exclude rains, and the "pit" is complete; and the potatoes safe till spring. It will be found that potatoes properly preserved, in a "pit" will "come out" in the spring in prime condition— firm and hard and sound —not withered and spongy as when kept in a more or less warm cellar.

If the above described way is defective or can be improved upon, the Examiner would be glad to make known some better way of "pitting" potatoes, if furnished by those who have had experience. This would be of interest and advantage to the new growers of potatoes who have been rewarded with a potato yield of such embarrassing abundance that they do not know what to do with it, in order to get the fullest advantage from it.

The Nova Scotia member of parliament who moved to cancel a vote of money to build a wharf in his own constituency, should be provided with either an angel's wings or a straight jacket.

Indifferent Attention To Our Agricultural Interests

The present Government certainly does many funny things. Not long ago we had it on the one hand clamoring for increased production of foodstuffs in order to relieve the shortage of our allies and on the other hand refusing to remove the duty from tractors which would have much simplified agricultural problems and made increased production a decidedly easier matter. And now we have another exhibition of incapacity and indecision on the part of the Dominion Department of Agriculture in its refusal to do anything which will materially aid the farmer in preparing for the 1918 crops. Advice and bulletins there are aplenty, but real leadership and generalship, the prime requisites for such a situation as the present one, are noticeably lacking.

As a leading agricultural publication, which does not hesitate to term the Government's inaction "an agricultural crime" points out,

"Talk is cheap, and plans are as numerous as the sands, but it takes man power, horse power, up-to-date machinery, mechanical power, soil fertility, good seasons and markets, that are not here to-day and gone to-morrow, to greatly increase the nation's food supply. Foremost of all what is wanted is leadership in this agricultural wilderness. Something ought to be done, in a big statesmanlike way to markedly increase the production of the chief food crops, such as wheat, oats, rye and beans. And be done now.

"It is criminal to expect those extra supplies to come out of a soil that needs the fertility of phosphates and potash in many cases; out of a depleted man-power on the farm, out of a low equipment of mechanical power, with the ever hovering bogey of uncertain prices before the producer, without the active intervention of the state in the controlling of transportation, in the marshalling of power machinery into the fields, or the turning of skilled labour into the work."

The same publication tabulates some of the agricultural needs of the hour as follows:

Use the discharged munition workers in operating the tractors already in the country, many standing idle.

Make every available engine draw a gang of plows, preparing for fall and spring crops.

Pay the wages of the men that will induce hundreds to apply at once. Run the tractors in double shifts, night and day, with acetylene headlights.

Carry the necessary phosphates to the country points where fall wheat is sown and finance them as low as possible.

Plow the land as never before. Farmers are calling for this assistance.

Give a bounty, if necessary, to cover labour costs of men breaking or guarantee a price for 1918 wheat.

Walk into the situation as a competent general with a big proposition, if the need of food is not a myth. Do the thing.

Sweep aside a great deal of this official duplication, red tape and cumbersome departmental machinery.

God has given us a soil unequalled anywhere, a climate and natural advantages almost Utopian. Man is the weak spot in the link. O ye agricultural leaders of little faith, wherefor doubt!

The total inability of the Government to cope with the situation is causing wide dissatisfaction with the present administration, which is perhaps more remarkable for its creation of high-salaried offices than for any actual relief of the food situation. Incompetence and inability to deal with big problems stand out as the salient features of the Borden regime at Ottawa. It is such exhibitions as this of wilful disregard of an exceedingly acute situation that cause doubt to be expressed as to the sincerity of the Government's more-food efforts, knowing as we do how the Government is tied hand and foot to Big Business and the food-hoarding interests. Never was leadership more necessary than at present; if the Borden Government cannot furnish it, there are others who can.—Brockville Recorder.

FOR 20 LONG YEARS SHE HAD SUFFERED

"It Certainly Was a Lucky Day For Me When I Got Tanlac" She Says

"I had tried in vain so long to find relief from my suffering that I had almost lost hope of ever getting anything to help me," said Mrs. Christian Hunter in an interview with a Tanlac representative a few days ago. Mrs. Hunter is the wife of William Hunter, caretaker of the Stanley Apartments, Bloor and Sherbourne streets, Toronto. She also has a great many freinds in Hamilton, Ont., where she resided for a number of years before coming to Toronto.

"I had one of the worst cases of stomach trouble, it seems to me, that a person could have," she continued, "and there was hardly a day in twenty years but what I suffered from indigestion. My appetite just seemed to leave me entirely and I never knew what it was to sit down to the table and enjoy a good meal. I was really afraid to eat because I knew how I would suffer afterwards and I hardly ate enough, it seems to me, to keep a baby alive. What little I did eat disagreed with me and I had an awful burning heavy feeling in the pit of my stomach nearly all the time I would bloat terribly from gas on my stomach, and during the past five years I have had several attacks of acute indigestion, and would almost die. I was laid up in bed two or three weeks at a time with each attack before I could get strength enough to get up. I had fallen off until I was scarcely more than a frame and was so weak I couldn't walk a block without getting so exhausted and out of breath I could hardly stand up. My nerves were just completely shattered and I would have such dreadful nervous spells at times I thought I couldn't live.

"My husband had taken Tanlac with fine results and advised me to try it. I had very little idea that it would help me but to please him I sent down to Tamblyn's and got a bottle and it certainly was a lucky day for me. I am now on my second bottle and it certainly has done me a world of good. My stomach is now in better shape than it has been in twenty years; my appetite is fine too, and I can eat just anything I want without a bit of trouble afterwards. Honestly, I can't remember the time that I enjoyed eating like I do since I began taking Tanlac. My nervousness is gone entirely, and I feel stronger and better in every way. Before I took Tanlac I was so [illegible] and worn out all the time I never felt like going to any place, and now Mr. Hunter and I go out most every night. I feel sure from my experience with Tanlac that there is nothing as good for troubles like I had and I think it is really wonderful how it has helped me."

BRITAIN IS MAKING SACRIFICES

GREAT CHANGE IN IMPORTS

Foodstuffs and Munitions Supplant Goods That Formerly Helped Productive Industry.

LONDON—There is published this morning a statement from a source which may be regarded as wholly reliable, showing the war's effects on British shipping.

The ocean-going shipping at present on the United Kingdom's register, inclusive of prizes, is a little more than 18,000,000 tons, of which 14,000,000 are employed in home service. Of the 14,000,000 thus employed, however, only about one-half is available for the trade of the country. About 5,500,000 tons have been allocated entirely to the needs of the navy, the army, the Allies, and the dominions overseas, a further million tons or thereabout being used for these purposes on the out journey and therefore lost to Britain's export trade, but available for imports.

Before the war the ocean-going vessels on the United Kingdom's register represented between 17,000,000 and 18,000,000 tons gross. Of this, more than 15,000,000 tons were regularly employed in trade with the United Kingdom the remainder being engaged in trades between foreign countries and various parts of the British dominions.

A large amount of this distant trading has been sacrificed to Britain's immediate needs and nearly 50 per cent. of the ships concerned brought home for the British trade. From the beginning of the war British ships have steadily been requisitioned by the Government and run in national instead of in private interest. The rates paid to ship owners soon became very much lower than the freights which could be earned by free ships, and British ship owners therefore have been unable to rely on earning the same freights as their competitors.

UNDER GOVERNMENT CONTROL.

Now the situation has reached the stage at which it has been necessary to take complete control of all British shipping in order to insure the employment of every vessel in the manner and on the terms as to rate of freight most consistent with the national interest. The result may be summarized as follows:

With the exception of a few vessels engaged in distant waters on work which is vital to the British colonies and of vessels chartered to France and Italy, the British Government has requisitioned for hire at the Government's rates about 97 per cent. of the ocean-going tramps on the United Kingdom register.

All British liners have been requisitioned and are being run for government account. The owners receive hire at government rates, and the profits derived from private freight carried at market rates go to the government and not to the shipowner. Every ocean going voyage of British steamers is now directed by the government, which has regard only to the question of how it can obtain essential imports from the nearest source and disregards the interests of both the shipowner and exporter. Many built-up trades in distant waters and sustained by British industry had to be abandoned to neutral owners who gladly seek employment for their vessels in areas immune from war risks.

Apart from the effect upon the shipping interests, the country generally has also had to suffer great, and increasingly great, scrifices, owing to the shortage of tonnage caused by war requireemnts and submarine losses.

"Before the war," says a British statesman, "we were importing at a rate of about 78,000,000 tons a year. In 1916 our imports fell to about 43,000,000 tons, and in the present year they will be considerably less. Even this large reduction does not exhibit the full amount of the sacrifices which we have made both of articles for our own consumption and of commodities for manufacture and export to our world customers.

CHANGES IN IMPORTS

"Of 58,000,000 tons which we imported before the war, foodstuffs were rather than a quarter. The rest was practically all employed or consumed in promoting the industries and commerce of peace. In 1916, however, two-thirds of all our supplies from overseas consisted of foodstuffs, munitions of war, and material for manufacture of munitions, leaving only one-third of a greatly reduced total for productive industries.

"In 1913 our total imports were valued at 769,000,000 sterling, of which about 94,000,000 came from countries with which we are now at war. In 1916 our imports were valued at 949,000,000 sterling, enemy countries being of course, eliminated from this figure.

"The great rise in prices accounts for a large part of the phenomenon of an increase in the money total with a decline in the amount imported, but on the best estimate that can be made it would appear that if in 1916 we had imported 43,000,000 tons of goods which we obtained from the same countries and in the same proportion as we imported before the war, they would have cost us rather less than 800,000,000 pounds.

"Therefore in the year 1916 we paid £150,000,000 more than our imports would have cost us if we had continued to buy the same class of commodities and from the same sources as before the war. In 1913 exports were valued at £525,000,000. In 1916 exports were valued at £506,000,000, but if these exports had been at prices of the 1913 level their value would have been only £386,000,000."

NEWSBOYS AND GIRLS READ THIS

Do You Want To Make Money

There is not a Boy in the City but is anxious to make all the money he can after school, so as it will be his own to do with as he likes.

SELLING "THE EXAMINER"

Newspaper is one of the easiest and most popular ways by which a schoolboy can make a good deal of money

First Prize $25

Second Prize $20

Third Prize $15

Fourth Prize $10

Fifth Prize $5

6th Prize $4 | 7th Prize $3

8th Prize $2 | 9th Prize $1

THE EVENING EXAMINER is sold to the NEWSBOY AT ONE CENT a copy. He sells it for TWO CENTS. In this way he doubles his money. By getting regular customers he delivers it to them at ten cents a week, and makes FOUR CENTS A WEEK ON EACH CUSTOMER. There are quite a number of newsboys delivering THE EXAMINER to customers who make as high as $2.50 A WEEK, and all done after school, in addition to the profit that is made by selling the papers. The Examiner is giving NINETY-FIVE DOLLARS IN CASH PRIZES to the boys who secure the most customers for themselves between MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10TH AND NOVEMBER 1ST NEXT, JUST NINE WEEKS. It does not make any difference whether you have one customer or fifty customers on Monday next, it is the boys who get the greatest number of new customers that win the prizes. Supposing you did not have any customers when you started, and at the end of the contest you had fifteen, another boy had fifty when the contest started, and at the end he had sixty-four, this boy would have only got fourteen new customers. And the first boy would win the prize because he had fifteen new customers to take The Examiner while the other boy had only fourteen. CASH PRIZES will be given to the boys who secure the GREATEST NUMBER OF NEW CUSTOMERS FOR THEMSELVES AS FOLLOWS:

BOYS! Make up YOUR MINDS to Enter the Contest on MONDAY Next

It is easy to sell THE EXAMINER. It is the legitimate business of the newsboy to sell papers, and if you are polite in your canvassing for new customers all your friends and even strangers will be glad to help you.

It is fine experience for any boy or girl, and as there are quite a few girls who are now distributing THE EXAMINER they are ELIGIBLE TO ENTER THE CONTEST.

Mothers and fathers talk this matter over with your boys and girls. It is a good business training. There are hundreds of young men successful in business in the City and elsewhere who have at some time in their earlier days been Examiner newsboys.

SELL ONLY THE EXAMINER. Get your friends to try it for a few weeks and you will find they will be regular customers, and remember a gain of a few new customers each week may win you the $25.00 PRIZE. If there is anything you DO NOT UNDERSTAND drop into THE EXAMINER OFFICE this week and it will be explained to you.

The only condition is that Each Boy or Girl must buy their own Papers and no Prizes will be awarded to a boy who buys another boys papers and put them in as his own.

IN ADDITION THERE WILL BE A

WEEKLY CASH PRIZE OF $1.00

Which will be paid EVERY MONDAY to the NEWSBOY or GIRL who makes the BIGGEST GAIN DURING EACH WEEK. A boy can be earning all the time, he has the profit on his customers, he may win the Weekly Prize of a $1.00 and he also has the opportunity of winning One of the Big Cash Prizes, the largest of which is $25.00.

ACKERMAN BY-LAW ENDORSED BY THE RATEPAYERS

Adoption of the Measure Will Mean the Establishing Here of Shoe Business

Yesterday at the polls the ratepayers of the city recorded their approval of the Ackerman by-law in the form of a very substantial majority. The total vote polled was eight hundred and seventy-one, of which one hundred and fifty-eight votes were registered against the measure. Two-thirds of the total vote polled was required to carry the by-law so that in the final analysis the measure was carried by a comfortable majority. This will enable the B. F. Ackerman, Son and Company to proceed with the establishment in Peterborough of their shoe factory and obtain from the city a fixed assessment for ten years of $23,790.00, dating from the fifteenth day of October next.

Grocers Are Obeying Law

Not Selling Canned Goods Although They Received No Notice Except Through Press

The recent ban placed upon the sale of canned goods, including pumpkin, peas, corn, tomatoes and beans, has caused little complaint about the city.

The local grocers have accepted as law the notification through the press and have not otherwise been forbidden, but no canned goods on the forbidden list have been sold in the city during the past week. The time for which the sale is forbidden are those in which the lightest demand for canned goods is received, the public for the most part using perishable vegetables from their gardens.

One grocer reported a slight dissatisfaction at the barring of the sale of pork and beans, which formerly afforded a quick lunch for a large percentage of the consumers.

THEY ARE AT IT AGAIN.

To the Editor of the Examiner,—

Sir,—The fruit profiteers make it a point every year, just as the fruit is appearing on the market, to circulate a report that the crop is a failure. They are at it again this year. They merely predict at most, but advance no proof. They do admit that the prices are high, but they do not tell us that it is owing to the combine. Their shafts are directed more particularly at peaches and plums.

I never saw such a heavy crop of plums in all my life as I did on Wednesday. The limbs had to be propped up and wired, and some were broken down by the weight of the fruit. What is the matter with Hanna, that he does not protect the public from abnormal prices.

Yours, etc.,
FRUCTUS.

Morphine Addicts Are Increasing

Only Concerted Action by Doctors and Druggists Can Abate Use of "Dreamland Elixir."

Notwithstanding the fact that opium as opium will be finally banished from China this year, morphine, its alkaloid, is being imported into the country in great quantities. China, therefore, has taken on the menace of morphine. In other words, the hypodermic syringe is taking the place of the opium pipe.

Dr. G. L. Tuck, a physician who writes under the name of Wu Lien-teh and who spent five years in Manchuria, has written a comprehensive article on this subject for The Lancet of London. It has been summarized in The Medical Record. Dr. Wu, or Tuck, says concerted action by doctors and druggists is needed to combat this new horror that threatens the oldest civilization. The Medical Record says:

"Wu Lien-teh (Dr. Tuck) states, that the year 1917 will be historic as the one in which opium, the curse of China for seventy-five years, will be officially and finally banished from the country, for in this year the ten-year agreement made between Great Britain and China regarding its importation into China, including the last two seaports of Shanghai and Canton, will come to an end, so that even in the British settlement of Shanghai the remaining opium shop will be closed by the month of March. The whole nation will rejoice at this happy termination of an awful vice, which once looked as if it might exterminate the Chinese race.

"That the drug is scarce may be ascertained by the fact that the present price in Canton is at least $15 per tael, with a tendency to rise. Except for some smuggling from Turkestan and Russia by way of Siberia, very little opium will in future find its way into China though the Government and customs authorities will still have to exercise, in dealing with this enormously paying business, the greatest vigilance over unscrupulous people.

MORPHINE IMPORTS INCREASE

"Such hopes cannot be sustained with regard to morphine, for up to the end of last year all statistics point to increased importations into China. The supply of morphine comes mainly from two firms in Edinburgh and one firm in London. The declared exports of morphine from Great Britain alone in 1912 equaled 7 1-2 tons, in 1913 11 1-2 tons, and in 1914, 14 tons, while in 1916 the estimate is at least 16 tons. In Japan a ton a month was imported for medicinal purposes in 1914. There is a large firm in Japan which acts as agent for the manufacturing firm in London.

"In 1913 alone this agent in Japan imported 2 1-2 tons of morphine by registered post via Siberia. The two other British firms exported 2 tons by the same method, and 1 3-8 tons came from Germany, making a total of 6 1-4 tons in 1913. So far it has been ascertained that neither Japan nor Germany has got the necessary plant to manufacture morphine on any large scale, and the alkaloid has comes mostly from firms in Great Britain. Once arrived in Japan, the morphine is usually made up in small packets or placed into small bottles, labeled in different ways—e. g., morphine, 'white powder,' 'soothing stuff, 'dreamland elixir,' etc., and exported openly or smuggled secretly into China by way of Dairy, Antung and Formosa.

"Almost every Japanese drug dealer or peddler in Manchuria sells it in one form or another, and does so with impunity because no Japanese can be arrested without complaint being first lodged at the Consulate. From these Japanese agents and subagents the drug may be passed on to disreputable Chinese who frequent the coolie depots and inject a solution, usually very dirty, with a hypodermic syringe which may be made with glass, metal, or even bamboo. Rigorous imprisonment for two years is a common sentence for Chinese found with morphine in their possession, but the principal culprits often escape punishment.

'Wu Lien-teh reports that during his five years' residence in Manchuria he has seen terrible havoc wrought upon the population by this drug. Thousands of poor people die in the large cities during the winter months, partly from cold, but principally from inability to work on account of their morphine habits. The evil appears to be spreading. Enormous profits are made by the dealers in this illicit trade. The profits made on six and a quarter tons by the dealers in China in 1913 amounted to about $4,200,000. Unless strong action is taken by the medical profession as was done in the case with opium, the morphine will spread further and render futile all efforts in the direction of opium eradication.

British Ratification Delayed.

"What is to be done? Three opium conferences have already been held at The Hague—in 1911-12, 1913, and 1914. At the second conference forty-four out of forty-six powers of the world had agreed to append their signatures to the convention, and at the third conference the United States, the Netherlands and China, deposited their ratifications so as to act forthwith upon the articles of the convention to restrict the evil effects of opium, morphine, cocaine, and allied drugs. Although the representatives of Great Britain were instructed at the second conference to declare on behalf of their government their readiness to ratify, the matt has so far been delayed.

"The war has put a stop to many things, but not to the fact that morphine still finds its way into China. Two articles in the convention signed on Jan. 23, 1912, state the contracting powers will enact pharmacy laws and regulations restricting the use of these drugs and their salts to medical and legitimate uses only; second, controlling the amount or percentage of the drugs of their salts to be used in official and non-official preparations.

AMERICAN OFFICER KILLED

U. S. Hospital on French Coast Bombed by Enemy Airmen

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

(By Wm. Philip Sims, U. P. Correspondent.

With the British Armies in the Field, Sept. 7.—An American officer was killed and five members of his staff wounded in a deliberate bombardment Tuesday by German airmen of an American hospital on the French coast. Ten patients in the hospital were also wounded.

AUTHENTICITY OF CORRESPONDENCE IS ADMITTED

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

(By John Grandens, U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

BERLIN, via London, Sept. 7.—Several German newspapers to-day commented at length on the dispatches from Petrograd recently printed in Allied newspapers revealing secret correspondence exchanged between Czar Nicholas and Kaiser Wilhelm in 1914 and later.

The Vossische Zeitung admitted the authenticity of this correspondence today and declared the Kaiser's stand therein was justified owing to British intrigues.

"The Kaisers purpose," the editorial asserted, "was merely to frustrate these and he acted only after conference with the Chancellor and the Foreign Minister."

The Lokal Anzeiger asserted the correspondence merely gave evidence of the Kaiser's endeavours to circumvent England's hostile plans. A Russo-German treaty proposed in the letters and telegrams, it was declared, would have insured peace.

A woman would rather people thought she was tailored made than self made.

DOROTHY ALLAN FAREWELL RECITAL

The following enthusiastic account of the great success achieved by Miss Dorothy Allan of this city, at the Knox Church concert at Owen Sound, is taken from the Advertiser of that place:

"The Knox Choir concert given last Thursday evening was equal in all respects to former concerts put on by that organization. The feature of the concert was the singing of Dorothy Allan of Peterborough, who though a new artist in Owen Sound, won the admiration of her auditors in all her numbers. She is a very capable artist, and has combined with a voice of rare quality and volume, just enough informality in her manner to make an instant appeal to the audience. Sanderson's "Spring's Wakening," her first number, was sung with a delicacy and finish scarcely to be hoped for in a more experienced soloist. Her execution in this number was perfection itself. Subsequent numbers from her were equally delightful. "Where my Caravan has Rested," (Lohr) was perhaps the favourite of all her selections. The composition is intrinsically beautiful, but when sung by Miss Allan, new beauties are revealed. In her last number, "La Marseillaise," sung in the French, Miss Allan demonstrated that in addition to a magnificent voice she possesses a strong magnetism that carries her audience everywhere with her. The audience received this thrilling number standing, and also stood for her encore number, "Rule Britannia," which was also sung with equal force and appeal. Her glorious bursts of power were a revelation, and the enthusiasm created by her singing almost impelled the audience to join in with her. It was magnificent. The duet number, "I Feel thy Angel Spirit," by Hoffman, sung by Miss Allan and Mr. McDonald, was also accorded an exceptionally hearty reception and insistent demands for another number from them were made. The two full rich voices are admirably suited for duet work and the applause received was well merited.

At her recital in the Collegiate Hall on Monday evening, Miss Allan will sing Sir Henry Bishop's classic, "Bid Me Discourse." The lightsome dancing nature of this composition, tends to show off the flexibility of the singer's voice. Miss Allan is also singing (by request) the lovely old Irish ballad, "The Last Rose of Summer."

Sir Wilfrid's Nominees Have Been Chosen

Liberal Members of the Board of Selection Are Named

OTTAWA, September 6.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier handed to Sir George Foster this afternoon, in the continued absence of Sir Robert Borden through temporary indisposition, the list of twelve men whom the Prime Minister asked the Opposition leader to name as members of the Board of Selection to be appointed by joint resolution of both Houses of Parliament to select members of the local Appeal Tribunals throughout Canada under the military service act. Sir Wilfrid's selections are an earnest of his desire "to see that the act is carried out as harmoniously as possible."

The names on his list are all men of outstanding position in Canadian life and of high reputation. The Liberal personnel of the board at any rate should be a guarantee that fairness and not political partisanship will rule in the working out of the act.

The names given by Sir Wilfrid to the Government are as follows:

Ontario—Sir J. M. Gibson, Hamilton, ex-Lieut.-Governor of Ontario; A. B. Lowe, Ottawa, representative of the International Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees.

Quebec — Hon. S. N. Parent, Montreal, ex-Premier of Quebec; Hon. Sidney Fisher, Knowlton, ex-Minister of Agriculture.

Nova Scotia—N. A. Cameron, barrister, Sydney, N.S.

New Brunswick—John G. McCaffrey, Fredericton, N.B.

Manitoba — Sir Donald McMillan, Winnipeg, ex-Lieut.-Governor of Manitoba.

Saskatchewan—Arthur Hitchcock, Moose Jaw.

Alberta—A. H. Clark, K.C., M.P., Calgary.

British Columbia—Hon. J. H. King, Victoria, Minister of Public Works.

CONSTRUCTION WORK IS PROGRESSING

Flags of the Allies Flutter From High Tower at Quaker Oats Plant

Rapid progress is being made in connection with the erection of the new plant of the Quaker Oats Company. The battery of new concrete elevators are about a third of the way up and a large section of the brickwork on the main building is in place. The work is being carried on night and day. At night the site of the plant is illuminated. The lights are carried to the top of the high towers used for elevating the concrete for the elevators. On top of the higher tower of the two floats the flags of the allies.

Bitter Fight Likely Over Election Bill

Opinion in Regard to Measure Develops on Party Lines

Canadian Press Despatch:

OTTAWA, Sept. 7.—That a long and bitter partisan fight will develop in Parliament on the War-Time Elections Bill is indicated to-day by summaries of newspaper comment sent here. It is quite evident that opinion in regard to the bill has developed definitely along party lines. Liberal papers, without regard to their attitude on conscription, have almost unanimously condemned the bill as built entirely for the benefit of the Borden Conservative Government, while Conservative journals acclaim the measure as the only thing possible in justice to Canadians overseas. In some sections of the Canadian West where the disenfranchisement clauses will cut a wide swath in the voters' lists, it is reported that strong representations will be made to the Government to prevent the bill going into effect.

Will Fight To A Finish

Liberals Are Seriously Opposed to Election Bill

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 7.—Though no official statement was given out at the close of the Liberal caucus this morning, it may be said that the concensus of opinion among members and senators was that the franchise bill should be fought to a finish in both houses. There was strong unanimity of opinion among all present against the measure as it stands.

NO VOTES FOR WOMEN WHO ARE OVERSEAS

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

OTTAWA, Sept. 7.—It appeared from a question asked in the House of Commons yesterday by Mr. Glass and answered by the Solicitor-General, that the fifty thousand wives and other women relatives at present overseas of Canadian soldiers would have a vote at the coming election. The question was misunderstood and the fact is that these women will not have a vote. Ontario women voters will have to be domiciled in the province just as is required of men voters, and those who went to the old County will not have a chance to vote.

Fish Supply For Peterboro'

Belated Message From Food Controller—Fish Has Been Available Here For Some Time

His Worship Mayor Duffus to-day received the following telegram from Food Controller Hanna. For some time past the local fish dealers have been supplying local consumers with fish supplied through the medium of the Food Controller. The message to Mayor Duffus reads as follows:

"Mayor Duffus, Peterboro, Ont.:

"We are receiving the cooperation of the Union of Canadian Municipalities regarding increasing the consumption of fish. If your city is interested in a supply of fresh ocean fish, these can be procured at once from the leading wholesale fish dealers of Toronto. Haddock is eight cents and cod eight cents a pound; all fish is headless and dressed; fancy stock by refrigerator from the Atlantic coast. Would suggest an advertisement to-day and cooperation with the local dealers. If demand by your customers justifies, car lots direct from Atlantic would mean further reductions in cost. This service has been made possible by the recent increased refrigerator rail service from Atlantic ports. -- W. J. Hanna, Food Controller."

CONFESSES TO PLOT

Montreal Man Admits He Was Implicated in Attempt on Life of Baron Atholstan

MONTREAL, Sept. 6.—Weeping bitterly, Joseph Tremblay made what he claimed was a full confession before Judge St. Cyr this afternoon as to his part in the recent theft of dynamite from the Martineau quarry and the attempt on the lives of Lord Atholstan and his family at Cartierville by dynamiting his Lordship's house on the night of August 9th. Tremblay said four or five men were in the plot, which was concocted at the anti-conscription meetings, and it was agreed that if any of the party turned traitor he should be shot, and the lives of his wife and family would be in danger. Tremblay claimed that his connection with the plot ended with the taking of the dynamite from the quarry, after the nightwatchman had been held up at the muzzles of revolvers. He himself was the only member of the quintette who was not armed, he said. The party left from Elie Lalumiere's residence and returned there. An influential gentleman, whose name Tremblay did not mention, had offered a big automobile for their use, he said.

Edouard Lalumierre, a brother of Elie's, failed to respond to a charge of stealing an automobile, his bail of $2,000 was entreated, and a bench warrant was issued for his arrest.

Bail for Alleged Bomb Gang.

MONTREAL, Sept. 6. — Arthur Blackwell, the alleged maker of bombs for the dynamiting gang, was admitted to bail this afternoon in sureties for $2,000 when it was shown that he is not an Austrian, as at first supposed, but an Englishman. Three others of the gang, Nere Henri Arsenault, Louis Bolduc and Joseph Paquette, were also admitted to bail in similar amounts. They will come up for preliminary hearing next Tuesday.

TORONTOS ARE STILL IN SECOND PLACE

Toronto, September 7. — Instead of availing themselves of yesterday's opportunity to regain the leadership of the International League, the Toronto Leafs are still in second place to-day, and their grip on that position is exceedingly insecure. Rochester beat the Lajoies again by 6 to 5. In Providence the Grays and Orioles divided a double header, thus psyckling the Leafs with the aforementioned opportunity to sneak into the lead again. Newark too improved their time by beating the Richmond Rebels both ends of a double bill, thereby projecting themselves back into the running, although their chances of getting to the front are comparatively remote.

Toronto's loss yesterday almost catapulted them into third place as the following record of the four leading teams indicates:

	Won.	Lost.	P.C.
Baltimore	81	56	.591241
Toronto	80	58	.585714
Providence	79	58	.586185
Newark	79	59	.572464

The Leafs have 14 games yet to play while the other contenders have about the same number. To-day the Buffalo herd will be here for a double header and another two timer will be played to-morrow. Two at Montreal on Sunday and one on Monday brings the Lajoies back here for Tuesday with the Royals. On the 14th and 15th Toronto plays the closing series of the season at Rochester.

Baltimore and Providence have yet to meet in Baltimore and both are scheduled to meet Newark in Newark. These series will decide the championship. They offer the Leafs a royal chance to dash to the front by beating Buffalo, Montreal and Rochester. The one thorn in the path is the collection of nine games between Baltimore and Richmond, a series in each city. The Rebels have won a majority of their games with the Orioles this season and if the Virginians maintain their average the Lajoies will make matters very unpleasant for the other pennant aspirants.

ELECTION BILL IS DISPLEASING TO SOME WOMEN

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner::

OTTAWA, Sept. 7.—There is a small group of suffragists here representing the Ontario Citizens' Association and the Federation of Franchise Workers, who this morning are keenly disappointed with the franchise bill.

On the other hand there are many ladies, particularly the Local Council of Women group, who consider it a step forward in the cause.

Mrs. John Penman, President of the W.C.T.U., said: "What is fair for one is fair for all, and surely there are just as many men here now whose vote would be as objectionable as some of the women. On general principles I think the act is wrong, because I never could see why an educated woman should not be entitled to vote as well as men, and surely there are just as many war brides now who will be granted the privilege who are apt to be far more ignorant of the vote and its value than many of the educated women who have worked hard for it."

ANOTHER GRAND DUKE ARRESTED.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 6—In addition to the arrest of Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch, brother of the former Emperor, and his wife, the Countess Paalen, the Grand Duke Paul and his morganatic wife have also been taken into custody. The reported arrest of Grand Duke Dmitri-Paulovitch is as yet unconfirmed. The arrests are the result of suspected complicity in the counter-revolutionary conspiracy.

FEARS SHOWER OF KINGS.

Wells Points to Danger of Harboring Homeless Monarchs.

In a phase of tottering thrones it is very undesirable that the British habit of asylum should be abused. We have already in England the dethroned monarch of a friendly republic; he is no doubt duly looked after. In the future there may be a shaking of the autumnal boughs and a shower of emperors and kings. We do not want Great Britain to become a hotbed of reactionary plotting and the starting-point of restoration raids into the territories of emancipated peoples. This is particularly desirable if presently, after the Kaiser's death—which by all the statistics of Hohenzollern mortality cannot be delayed now for many years—the present Crown Prince goes a-wandering. We do not want any German ex-monarch here; Sweden is always ope to them and friendly, and to Sweden they ought to go; and particularly do British people dread an irruption of Hohenzollerns or Coburgers.

Even more undesirable would be the arrival of the Czar and Czarina. It is supremely important that no wind of suspicion should blow between us and the new freedom of Russia. After the war even more than during the war will the enemy be anxious to sow discord between the great Russian-speaking and English-speaking democracies. Quite apart from the scandal of their inelegant domesticities, the establishment of the Czar and Czarina in England with frequent and easy access to our royal family may be extraordinarily unfortunate for the British monarchy. I will confess a certain sympathy for the Czar myself. He is not an evil figure, he is not a strong figure, but he has that sort of weakness, that failure in decision, which trails revolution in its wake. He has ended one dynasty already. Our royal family owes it to itself quite as much as to our Empire, that he bring not the infection of his misfortunes hither.—H. G. Wells in The New Republic.

"God Save 'Um King."

A proclamation in "pidgin" English was read in Prize Court in proceedings for the condemnation of a German vessel seized in Tekeriki, in the New Ireland group of the Bismarck Archipelago. The proclamation to the natives on the annexation of the German possession read:

All boys belongina one place; you savvy big master he come now, he now feller master, he strong feller too much, you look him all ship stop place; he small feller ship belongina him. Russian Railways in War.

The army and the munition industries alone absorb fully 50 per cent. of the carrying capacity of the Russian railways, so that there remains only 50 per cent. to satisfy the needs of the civilian population, which have also grown, as compared with peace time. In 1916 the Russian railways had to carry in the department of mineral fuel alone 2,700,000 tons more than in 1915. As to passenger traffic great as are the inconveniences to which the civilians are subjected, the railway ministry cannot hold out any hope of improvement either now or in the near future, because a large number of passenger cars had to be turned into hospital coaches, while all the passenger car works, both in Russia and abroad, are engaged in building freight cars only. The passenger traffic, on the other hand, has greatly increased during the last two years, roughly by 20 per cent., and on some railways by 40 per cent.—London Railway Gazette.

Respect One German Soldier.

The Belgian Minister of Colonies has issued the following: "The commander of the Belgian troops operating in German East Africa has authorized Major Wintgens, captured May 22nd, to retain his sword, desiring thereby to do honor to a vanquished enemy who proved himself honorable, loyal, and courteous, contrasting by this attitude the actions of a majority of the German chiefs with whom the Belgians have fought in Europe and Africa."

Lakes Disappearing.

It is believed that about one hundred lakes in the Tyrolese Alps have subsided and disappeared within the last century.

THEY LIVE ON VEGETABLES.

A Food Expert Says That is Why the Koreans Are Indolent.

Dr. Ugen Ishizuki, a well known dietarian, who recently made a trip of observation in Korea, Manchuria and other parts of China, ascribes the docility and indolence of the Koreans to their predominantly vegetarian diet. To make them more alert and active, he urges, it is necessary to encourage the use of much more animal food among them.

The radish is the article of food most relished by Koreans, who call it the wild ginseng and eat it raw. But the most remarkable thing about their love of vegetable food is the tremendous amount of cayenne pepper that they take. About one-fifth of the vegetables on sale at markets is red pepper.

Instead of soy sauce, the Koreans use the juice of salted fish. For pickles they use a mixture of salted radish, Chinese rape, onions, rocambole and cayenne pepper. This preparation has an excellent flavor and is eaten at every meal. An average family keeps enough of this preparation to last a year.

An alarming number of Koreans are suffering from parasites, chiefly due, in Dr. Ishizuki's opinion, to the crabs they eat in great quantity.

Changing All the Time.

Often the change in the use or manner of use of some household item makes a widespread change in the sale of a lot of hardware items. For some years rugs have been taking the place of carpets. This means the sale of fewer carpet tacks, tack hammers and carpet stretchers, but more carpet beaters. Again the introduction of vacuum cleaners cut down the sale of carpet beaters.

So in like manner the present fashion of hanging pictures from moldings has about put picture nails out of business, but largely increased the sale of molding or picture hooks.

In somewhat similar fashion not many foot scrapers are in use because concrete sidewalks are so universal.

The growing use of food choppers has materially decreased the sales of mincing knives and wood bowls

Value of Skimmilk.

The department of agriculture has discovered that about 17,000,000,000 gallons of skimmilk are annually wasted in this country.

Every farmer knows that skimmilk will fatten hogs. That proves that it has a nutritional value. The food value of milk is not entirely destroyed by the removal of the cream and butter fat. There is a lot of protein in the residue, and this protein is good for the human system. Some people cannot drink whole milk; it disagrees with them. These same people thrive on milk from which the cream has been removed. The department of agriculture is right in calling attention to the fact that 17,000,000,000 gallons of excellent food have been overlooked in these days of high cost of living.—

What You Eat In Apples.

Do you know what you are eating when you eat an apple? You are eating malic acid, the property that makes buttermilk so healthful. You are eating gallic acid, one of the most necessary elements in human economy. You are eating sugar in the most assimilable form, combined carbon, hydrogen and oxygen caught and imprisoned from the sunshine. You are eating albumen in its most available state. You are eating a gum allied to the "fragrant medicinal gums of Araby." You are eating phosphorus in the only form in which it is available as a source of all brain and nerve energy. In addition to all these, you are drinking the purest water and eating the most healthful and desirable fiber for the required "roughness" in food elements.

Johnson and Seven.

President Johnson had seven letters in his name. When he was fourteen, twice seven, he became a tailor's apprentice, which he remained for seven years. When he was twenty-one, three times seven, he gave up tailoring. When he was twenty-eight, four times seven, he became an alderman. At thirty-five, five times seven, he entered the legislature. In 1862, six times seven, he was a member of congress. At forty-nine, seven times seven, he was a senator. On the 7th of March, 1862, he was military governor of Tennessee. At fifty-six, eight times seven, he became vice president.

Mapping the United States.

Beginning nearly forty years ago to construct accurate topographic and geologic maps of both the known and the unexplored regions of the United States, the United States geological survey has speedily progressed with this part of its work until topographic maps of 40 per cent of the country are now published, besides maps for large areas in Alaska and Hawaii. Extensive areas have also been covered by geologic maps, and all the work from the beginning of the field survey to the printing of the finished map is done by this government bureau. Other activities of the survey are the classification of public lands, the annual collection of mineral statistics of the United States and investigations of the nation's water resources, all involving the publication of scientific and technical reports containing over 20,000 pages annually.

During the last thirty years over $15,000,000 has been spent by the geological survey in geologic and topographic surveys in the United States.

Seeing Distances.

About 200 miles in every direction is the distance a man can see when standing on a clear day on the peak of the highest mountain—say at a height of 20,003 feet, or a little over five miles above the level of the sea. An observer must be at a height of 6,667 feet above sea level to see objects at a distance of a hundred miles. The distance in miles at which an object upon the surface of the earth is visible is equal to the square root of one and one-half times the height of the observer in feet above sea level. Some allowance has to be made for the effect of atmospheric refraction, but as the refraction varies at different heights and is affected by the various states of the weather no precisely accurate figures for general purposes can be given. Probably from one-fourteenth to one-tenth of the distance given by the formula would have to be deducted owing to the refraction of the atmosphere.

Twenty Seats For Labour Men

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner::

WINNIPEG, Sept. 7.—Labour men will have fully twenty seats in the next House of Commons, judging from the activity in Labour circles, stated Controller Puttee to-day.

"Conscription and new franchise act has given fresh vigour to the Trades and Labour men's plans. Among the cities which are placed in the list of those which will return Labour members at the next election are: Winnipeg one, and possibly two; Regina, Calgary, Fernie, Edmonton, Victoria, each one; Vancouver one and possibly two. Candidates will also be in the field in Fort William, Port Arthur and Moose Jaw. In Ontario western labour men figure that their candidates will be elected in Toronto, two and perhaps three; Ottawa, Kingston, Hamilton and London.

WHICH WILL MATTER?

It will matter little to you, or me,
When the morning dawns of eternity,
And we stand arraigned at the judgment seat
A sentence of life or death to meet,

Whether proud and high were our name and birth,
With lordly estate, 'mid the great of earth,
The favoring smile of fair fortune shared,
On her lavish bounty, sumptuous fared.

Or our portion, by Heaven's all-wise decree,
Were the weary struggles of poverty,
And happy by stern necessity led,
In the sweat of our brow, we earned our bread.

But it will matter much in that day I ween,
What our lives, and works, in this world have been,
If we careless followed the frivolous throng,
On life's great tide, simply drifting along.

Or if straight by the Pole Star our course we steered
O'er the raging sea, until port appeared,
Standing calmly aloof, let the world go by,
Wasting not for its pleasures a sinful sigh.

Aye, it will matter much, in that radiant sphere,
If our hearts were true, and our conscience clear;
The good that we might, if we've faithful done,
To our fellow mortals, and injured none.

Never by slander's unholy art
Reft the peace and joy from another's heart,
But with thoughts encentred, beyond the skies
Pressed we firmly on toward the shining prize.

At that tribunal it will matter alone
Whether wheat or tares we shall reap as sown,
With the cursed on the left we are doomed to stand,
Or with the blessed at Christ's right hand.

Chicago Peace Mayor Hides

CHICAGO Sept 6.—A demonstration of soldiers against fifty automobile parties constituting a delegation of the William Hale Thompson Republican Club, bound for a county fair and political rally at Kankakee, was avoided by the Mayor.

The Mayor, who was by implication censured by a vote of the City Council for his anti-war attitude, had warning that his welcome along the route of sixty-six miles might be embarrassing, and he was not in line when the procession started.

Soldiers, however, mistook someone for him, and stripped a banner giving the name of the club from the machine in which they thought he was riding. Civilians joined in the demonstrations and other banners were torn from machines.

Police Will Look After The Enforcing Of Conscription Act

Much Will Depend on the People in Making the Law Effective—"Everyone His Neighbour's Conscriptor" Seems to be the Method

OTTAWA, Sept. 7.— Everyone his neighbour's conscriptor! That is going apparently to be the state of affairs under the Military Service Act. The word "informer" has an ugly sound, but it looks as if informers were to be necessary if the conscription net is to gather into its meshes all who ought to be caught.

Boards of Exemption are being appointed, but there is no registration, so the question is how are the authorities or anyone to know whether any particular man has or has not answered the demand to come and be conscripted, or has or has not been exempted? If there was registration it would be easy, but there is none.

Who Will Keep Track?

Suppose a young fellow lives in a boarding house and moves to another city or to a farm, whose business is it to enquire of him during any part of his examinations as to whether he has offered himself of his own accord for sacrifice?

A certain professional man in a certain Canadian city, too old to serve himself satisfied his desire to be doing something patriotic during the early days of the war by informing the authorities of alien enemies and having them rounded up. He will now find apparently a new outlet for his patriotic activities by tracing conscription avoiders to their lair.

Hon. Arthur Meighen, Solicitor-General and Secretary of State, was asked who would do the conscription, who would see that those who ought to really do report to the military authorities? Mr. Meighen replied: "The officers of the law. If they are not sufficient, we may take such means as we think necessary."

Government Has Power.

Section 12 of the Act under the subhead "regulations," says: "The Governor-in-Council may make regulations to secure the full, effective, and expeditious operation and enforcement of this Act, and may appoint such peace officers or other officers, and give them such powers and impose on them such duties as may be deemed necessary."

Mr. Meighen was asked how the young man who moved about from place to place would be rounded up. He replied: "If you take up any of the English papers you will see enquiries about such men who have for the time being eluded the authorities."

"But they have registration in England?"

"Well, we'll practically have it here. After all there are few people who don't know whether there is someone in their neighbour's family who ought to be conscripted."

Depend Upon Police.

"So that in the last analysis you are really depending on the people to make the law effective?"

"No; in the last analysis we are depending on the officers of the law."

On July 11th, while the bill was in committee, J. G. Turriff asked in the House how the authorities would know if a number of young men, say, in Ottawa, should fail to come forward?

Mr. Meighen replied: "The general answer would be, in the same way as they know of the violation of any law, but specifically they might say that, inasmuch as everywhere in Canada there are those who have gone forward, and who are interested that more go forward, and that this war be pressed forward with all the strength of the country, it is believed that that class of people will make themselves of service to their country by making known to the authorities those who disobey the law, and I think there are good grounds for that belief."

Sure People Will Aid.

"I do not think there is any section in Canada where there are not sufficient numbers who are interested generally in the enforcement of the law and interested generally in the enforcement of such law as strengthens the army in this country for the war, and who will assist their country by reporting men who fail to do their duty under this Act."

After Sir Robert Borden had pointed out that even under registration they would be faced with the same difficulty, and that in the United States they were hunting down men who had failed to register, E. W. Nesbitt declared that in many sections of the country people would consider it tattling to tell on a neighbour's boy and think it disloyal to the neighbour.

Reply Upon Loyalty.

Replying to this remark, Mr. Meighen said: "They would think it better to be disloyal to their neighbour than to their country as such a time as this. I have full confidence that depending on the means I have stated, infractions of the law will be ascertained, but if that dependence is not sufficient, and if other means should be found necessary to find out those who have not registered, such means as may be necessary will be taken."

The Franchise Bill Will Not Stand Very Close Scrutiny

Government Election Measure Allows 600,000 New Votes But Cuts Off More Than That—Quebec Gets An Advantage

Ottawa, Sept. 7.—As the significance of the government's war-time Election Act dawns upon the Liberal members of the House of Commons, the antagonism to it grows in bitterness. It is very wisely not called a Franchise Act, for it is in essence a Disfranchising Act. It enfranchises perhaps six hundred thousand women but it disfranchises a million others who would naturally expect the franchise, and many of whom would actually have it except that the government has deliberately suspended the provincial laws, which give it to them. It also disfranchises a great body of naturalized voters to whom Canada, in naturalization papers, pledged "all the rights of a British born subject," which, of course, includes the vote for men who have the proper age and residence qualifications.

It is common knowledge that the bill is not the child of Sir Robert Borden. It is freely stated that he, if left alone, would never have drawn such a bill, but he has yielded to its advocates. He has accepted the suggestion of Hon. Arthur Meighen that Canada's naturalization pledge be considered a scrap of paper. It is known that the negotiations with Western Liberals for a Union Government were hampered by this attitude on the part of the Solicitor-General. Every man who was naturalized in Canada prior to this war was given a solemnly sealed covenant that he would have a vote. This covenant Canada now proposes to break. In this connection it is interesting to observe what Sir Robert Borden said about the necessity of keeping national covenants no longer than June 11th of this year. He was talking then, not about Canada's promise to give a vote but her promise not to impose military service on certain immigrants. He said: "Certain communities of Mennonites and Doukhobors came into Canada on the faith of Orders-in-Council which I have mentioned. Under these Orders-in-Council, the settlers referred to were not to be called on to perform military service, it is absolutely clear that faith of a country thus pledged must be kept."

Sir Robert thus committed himself to the noble sentiment that it is absolutely clear that the pledged faith of a country must be kept when that pledge relates to exemption from military service, but he now stands committed to the doctrine that the pledged faith of a country is to be considered a scrap of paper when it comes to the granting of a vote.

A peculiar feature of the bill is that it enlarges the franchise in the war, while restricting it in Ontario, which has done so much, that is, in Ontario thousands of naturalized subjects will lose their votes, and also thousands of British born as well as naturalized women, who have no soldier father, brother, husband or son, though these would have had a vote if the provincial franchise been adopted in the natural course of events.

In Ontario the whole effect is to disfranchise, in Quebec the whole effect is to enfranchise. Unlike Ontario, that province contains only a negligible number of enemy-born subjects. Therefore very few people there will lose their votes. But many will gain a vote for Quebec has no woman franchise. Provincially, her women would not have voted at all.

While the Conservative party as a whole will undoubtedly swing in behind the new Elections Act, some of the members do not disguise their fears that it is a bad move politically. These say that it may win one election but that it is liable to put the party out of office for many elections thereafter. They also fear that it will provide Sir Wilfrid Laurier with a reason for ination in continuing enforcement of the conscription law if he should come back to power at the coming election. So elected, he might claim, these members think, that a strictly British and ally-born vote had given him a mandate against conscription.

It may possibly be, however, that their reckoning in this regard is at fault, as Canada's conscripted troops may be ready for overseas or even in England before the election is held.

New Drug Acts on Every Organ of Body

Makes Your Checks Rosy.

A pale face, sallow complexion, weak stomach, clogged liver, painful kidneys, catarrh affections, rheumatic pain, run-down and anemic conditions of the whole system are caused from an impure, thin and watery condition of the blood. All these organs of the body are directly dependant on the blood for their source of strength. It will be a great boom to all these thousands of weak, anaemic, nervous, run-down people to hear and learn about this new drug "Bonised Phosphorus with Iron." After each meal and at bedtime take from two to three of these tablets with a little water. You will note that you will get results after the first few doses the iron acts immediately upon the blood while the phosphorus goes direct to the spine, the center of the nervous system.

As soon as you get the blood purified and the nerves soothed, the stomach, liver and kidneys begin to do their work and in 8 to 10 days you will be 100 per cent. stronger. Your blood pressure will be increased, making your cheeks rosy and you once more have that vigorous, vivacious, keen, bright, alert feeling of boyhood days. The new drug is dispensed by F. C. Webber.

THE WONDERFUL MISSION OF THE INTERNAL BATH

By C. G. PERCIVAL, M.D.

Do you know that over five hundred thousand Americans and Canadians are at the present time seeking freedom from small as well as serious ailments, by the practice of

Do you know that hosts of enlightened physicians all over the country, as well as osteopaths, physical culturists, etc., etc., are recommending and recognizing this practice as the most likely way now known to secure and preserve perfect health?

There are the best of logical reasons for this practice and these opinions and these reasons will be very interesting to everyone.

In the first place every physician realises and agrees that 95 per cent. of human illness is caused directly or indirectly by accumulated waste in the colon; this is bound to accumulate, because we of to-day neither eat the kind of food nor take the amount of exercise which Nature demands in order that she may thoroughly eliminate the waste unaided.

That's the reason when you are ill the physician always gives you something to remove this accumulation of waste before commencing to treat your specific trouble.

It's ten to one that no specific trouble would have developed if there were no accumulation of waste in the colon—

And that's the reason that the famous Professor Metchnikoff, one of the world's greatest scientists, has boldly and specifically stated that if our colons were taken away in infancy, the length of our lives would be increased to probably 150 years. You see, this waste is extremely poisonous and as the blood flows through the walls of the colon, it absorbs the poisons and carries them through the circulation—that's what causes Auto-Intoxication, with all its pernicious, enervating and weakening results. These pull down our powers of resistance and render us subject to almost any serious complaint which may be prevalent at the time. And the worst feature of it is that there are few of us who know when we are Auto-Intoxicated.

But you never can be Auto-Intoxicated if you periodically use the proper kind of an Internal Bath—that is sure.

It is Nature's own relief and corrector—just warm water, which used in the right way, cleanses the colon thoroughly its entire length, and makes and keeps it sweet, clean and pure, as Nature demands it shall be for the entire system to work properly.

The following enlightening news article is quoted from the New York Times:

"What may lead to a remarkable advance in the operative treatment of certain forms of tuberculosis, is said to have been achieved at Guy's Hospital. Briefly, the operation of the removal of the lower intestine has been applied to cases of tuberculosis, and the results are said to be in every case satisfactory.

"The principal of the treatment is the removal of the cause of the disease. Recent researches of Metchnikoff and others have led doctors to suppose that many conditions of chronic ill-health, such as nervous debility, rheumatism and other disorders, are due to poisoning set up by unhealthy conditions in the large intestine, and it has even been suggested that the flowering of the vitality resulting from such poisoning is favorable to the development of cancer and tuberculosis.

"At the Guy's Hospital Sir Wil[illegible] decided upon the heroic plan of removing the diseased organ. A child who appeared in the final stages of what was believed to be an incurable form of tubercular joint disease, was operated on. The lower intestine with the exception of nine inches, was removed, and the portion left was joined to the smaller intestine.

"The result was astonishing. In a week's time the internal organs resumed all their normal functions and in a few weeks the patient was apparently in perfect health."

You undoubtedly know, from your own personal experience, how dull and unfit to work or think properly, biliousness and many other apparently simple troubles make you feel. And you probably know, too, that these irregularities, all directly traceable to accumulated waste, make you really sick if permitted to continue.

You also probably know that the old-fashioned method of drugging for these complaints is at best only partially effective; the doses must be increased if continued, and finally they cease to be effective at all.

It is true that more drugs are probably used for this than all other human ills combined, which simply goes to prove how universal the trouble caused by accumulated waste really is—but there is not a doubt that drugs are being dropped as Internal Bathing is becoming better known—

For it is not possible to conceive until you have had the experience yourself, what a wonderful bracer an Internal Bath really is; taken at night, you awake in the morning with a feeling of lightness and buoyancy that cannot be described—you are absolutely clean, everything is working in perfect accord, your appetite is better, your brain is clearer, and you feel full of vim and confidence for the day's duties.

There is nothing new about Internal Baths except the way of administering them. Some years ago Dr. Chas. A. Tyrrell, of New York, was so miraculously benefitted by faithfully using the method then in vogue, that he made Internal Baths his special study, and improved materially in administering the Bath, and in getting the result desired.

This perfected Bath he called the "J.B.L." Cascade, and it is the one which has so quickly popularized and recommended itself that hundreds of thousands are to-day using it.

Dr. Tyrrell, in his practice and researches discovered many unique and interesting facts in connection with this subject; these he has collected in a little book, "The What, the Why, the Way of Internal Bathing," which will be sent free on request, if you address Chas. A. Tyrrell, M. D., Room 114, 163 College Street, Toronto, and mention having read this in The Peterboro Examiner.

This book tells us facts that we never knew about ourselves before, and there is no doubt that everyone who has an interest in his or her own physical well-being, or that of the family, will be very greatly instructed and enlightened by reading this carefully prepared and scientifically correct little book.

"MOUNTAIN MADNESS"

By Anna Alice Chapin

The music from the ballroom, gay and sweet and seductive, drowned the snar of the thunder, drowned the thud of the first heavy drops upon the roof. But a gust of wind blew boisterously in at one of the open windows and scattered a score of dainty favors. The next blaze of lightning was so close and so vivid that they could notice it even in the brightly lighted ballroom. A wild rush of rain drove the Judge and Radnor close to the wall of the Casino. In a moment the veranda was wet to within a foot of where they stood. The big trees about the Casino were sighing in great moaning gasps. Their bending leaf-loaded branches showed in that light that streamed from the windows. Some Japanese lanterns strung up for the occasion blew down and went scuttling off upon the wet gale.

"Well," said Radnor, "you may like mountain storms, Judge, but I always have a queer feeling of being up before the Judgment Seat when I strike a peach of a one like this. I'd hate to have any very black crime on my soul and face that lightning!"

He laughed, but the Judge did not laugh. Rather a strange look came over his face.

"I never thought of that," he said, half musingly. "What made you think of it—now?"

Jack laughed again. "I haven't the faintest idea! I was thinking that wickedness might serve as a kind of lightning conductor——"

"The—the rain is growing a little too much for a rheumatic old man," interrupted Judge Denby brusquely. "I'm going inside."

That evening was one which Jack Radnor never forgot. Enid could not be found. No one had seen her: no one knew even where—or whether—she had dined. Mrs. Forsythe and Alice had each believed her to be with the other. And yet the mother still had to smile and give out favors and talk platitudes with her associate matrons, and Jack Radnor had to dance with the girls who hadn't enough partners or whose mamas had asked him to week-ends and yachting cruises. And the storm raged with increasing fury outside so that the roar of the rain upon the earth could now be heard persistently through all the charming rhythms of the dances. The electric lights failed once and there was a faint panic until two dripping electricians came to the rescue. The thunder sounded, as one girl said shakily, "like the ghosts of the big guns of the Civil War come back to haunt the place!" A general sense of nervousness seemed to pervade the dance. The laughter was a bit forced, and when a great glare of blue would pour blindingly in through a window, women would shrink and gasp a little. Judge Denby even was not so debonnair as usual. His handsome, florid face was somewhat paler that its wont, and he talked less,—and less oratorically.

As for Jack, whether he danced or talked, sat out or purveyed refreshments, he was in a sort of daze of unreality. It seemed like a fantastic dream; as if all of them were actors in the night-marish play of a madman. Once in a while his eyes met those of Mrs. Forsythe, and in both was the same mute question. Jack told himself that his anxiety was foolish. Enid had other friends in the Homestead Hotel, who had not come to the dance. She might have decided at the last moment to spend the evening with any one of them. She was extremely independent and erratic in her actions, and often even her mother had not the faintest idea where to look for her. Still——

Another thing gave the evening an element of subdued excitement. Every one was wondering if Martin Hale would return, as he had promised, before the time came to unmask. As the time drew on toward midnight people looked often at the door. Radnor found himself with his watch in his hand every two minutes. Hale could, of course, make it if he had good horses, but it would be hard going.

Twelve o'clock, and the unmasking had begun. Outside was by this time a solid wall of roaring rain that shut them in as though their gay little Casino were a prison.

"What preposterous tale is this," said Judge Denby to Jack, "about that ruffian Hale coming here and getting away again with some cock-and-bull promise of coming back? Really, I am deeply annoyed with Ralph!"

"Are you?" said Jack, in an odd tone. "Look there!"

A man, streaming with rain water, stood in the doorway. He wore a mask which he removed even as they all gazed at him.

"I hope I'm not late," said Martin Hale.

CHAPTER XXIV
THE UNSIGNED NOTE.

Night, and one single ridge of narrow path
. . . .The woods
Waving and muttering for the moonless night
Has shaped them into images of life,
Like the uprising of the giant-ghosts.
—Robert Browning

Enid Forsythe soon discovered that a mountain storm and a girl on horseback are not very evenly matched. The competition is decidedly unfair. Blinded and deafened by the rain, the lightning, the rolling thunderbolts and the mad gale, all increased a hundredfold by the vast augmenting mountain tops, among which she rode, she was bent go her pommel, and shaken with cold and nervousness. Dauntless in spirits beyond most girls, she was, for the time being, effectually beaten by this tempest. And with the sense of helplessness and defeat came a sick reaction from the mood which had sent her up the trail that night. What was she doing here, what good could she be to Martin Hale or anybody else,—she, this poor wretched, drenched piece of feminine humanity, drooping in her saddle and wishing from the bottom of her heart that she had never left the Valley?

But Enid was made of better stuff than she knew. She was not really beaten,—only baffled. With a fresh impetus her will and pluck would spur her on again. Meanwhile, all she longed for was a shelter. And she found it!

It was Malone's mountain shack, though she did not know that. When he was there he left a big, draught-proof, oil lantern burning to guide him home, and it was this yellow glimmer winking between the writhing, dripping trees of the Ridge that beckoned Enid with what at that instant seemed a blissful promise. Somewhere there was a light and a roof, and a respite from the relentless winds that tore at her with their cruel fingers. Sick with the ordeal of the last half mile along the dreadful Ridge, she guided the horse toward the light, and in a few minutes more she was in the shack.

No one was there. Her first feeling was one of relief. Then she was sorry because she had hoped to find some man who could look out for her horse, which had suffered nearly as much as she. Then she sat down on a hard chair, covered her face with her hands, and tried to get her breath and her assurance back again.

It was there that the Fates sent her the impetus necessary to carry her farther on her adventure. On the table at her elbow was an open letter and, half-unseeing at first, Enid's eyes wandered to it.

The note was in a writing which she did not know,—a very forcible, clear writing, though in pencil. Enid would not have read it if she had not seen a sharp square "H" in the middle of it.

"H" suggested Hale,—and, almost mechanically, she read the words that immediately followed: "He has been unmanageable lately."

Then quite deliberately and with no qualms of conscience she went back and deciphered the whole letter. It ran: "Make it on the 27th. Word, Mountain Laurel. Look out for H. He has been unmanageable lately. If necessary, fix things on him. He'd be safer in jail."

There was no apparent identity. Whoever had written those nonchalant and unscrupulous sentences knew that he spoke with authority, and that his briefest scribbled word would be recognised, understood, and obeyed.

So this was what it all meant! They were "fixing things" on Martin Hale, because he had become "unmanageable" and would be "safer in jail!" Enid had never heard the expression "frame up," but she grasped the significance of that curt, hasty note only too well. Her blood burned in her veins, with indignation and defiance. So they were trying to do that? Well, they shouldn't! They shouldn't! She would die first. The man who wrote that note should be exposed if it took her final breath, and her last ounce of energy.

She flung open the cabin door, all forgetful of the weather which had driven her to this strange shelter. But she was forced to stagger back against the fury of the wind and rain which assaulted her. For a moment, clinging to the door, she felt hopeless and desperate. Even the elements were against her. Then, breathing hard, but thinking steadily, she made up her mind. This storm might rage for the rest of the night. It would doubtless be succeeded by days of heavy, unremitting rain. She knew by experience that at times weeks of black weather were in the mountains. In that case, there would be washouts and landslides and the trails would become steadily more difficult to travel. Places that were now only risky would soon be dangerous—if not impassable. The fords around the foot of the hills would be rivers; half the narrower paths would be washed away. Therefore, if she was to get to the Valley with the mysterious document that would seem to clear Hale and incriminate another man, she would lose and not gain by waiting.

She knew that the high Ridge Trail was perfectly safe, however, terrifying to follow in this tempest.

She must ride up to it, then go not south but north,—toward the Toll Gate. Then, if the lower road had already become treacherous, she would have to walk down to Warm Sulphur Springs, and hire some sort of trap to drive her over to the Homestead. This was a perfectly good plan. There was, indeed, only one thing against it,—a thing which she was to discover in a minute or so.

Shark Skin Leather.

The use of shark skins for leather is becoming a large industry, and many fishing sloops are now engaged in the business of catching sharks. This work is common in both the Atlantic and the Pacific. The shark has never been considered as anything more than an enemy of man, but the leather industries of the country are finding a good use for it.

Poisoned Candy Dropped by Huns

PROOF that German aviators make a practice of dropping poisoned candies into the French villages near the western battle front is contained in a letter from T. Shaw Bosworth, a member of the editorial staff of The New York Times, now driving an ambulance for the American Ambulance Corps in the region of Verdun. Mr. Bosworth writes:

"Here's evidence of the latest Boche atrocity—the 'lowest down' thing they've yet pulled off. I have had some difficulty in getting the official copies. Here are the facts: The copy, signed with the Mayor's stamp, was posted on our official military bulletin board, 15 K. from the lines two days after the date—March 21—which you see at the top and attracted a good deal of attention, as Boche aviators fly over us very frequently. The notice was followed by a second one, in substance the same as the first, on a small sheet of paper and signed by the Mayor. No similar warning to the inhabitants had up to then appeared on the bulletin board, which daily carries the official communique—lately brilliant records of English advances in the north.

"That some of the Boches who fly over us may drop poisoned candies, which might be found by some of the children that still remain in the village, strikes us as the last refinement of Prussian barbarism in its death throes. The French don't make announcements like the warning I am sending you with a view to creating an 'effect' in the sense of influencing public opinion against the enemy, so the reason for spreading this warning broadcast is a sound one and has no connection with propaganda.

The following is the literal translation of the notice posted by the Mayor of the village in which is stationed the unit of the American Ambulance Corps with which the writer is serving:

Province of Meuse,
Division of Verdun,
District of Soulliy,
Parish of Vadelaincourt,
Republic of France.

NOTICE TO THE INHABITANTS.

The Mayor has been officially warned that poisoned candies have lately been dropped by German aviators in the neighborhood of St. Menehould, (Marne.) This information confirms the fears expressed by the Prefect in his circular of March 21, following similar actions by German aviators behind the English lines: "It is reasonable to believe that the enemy will, at any moment, commit the same indescribable acts at certain points in the Province of Meuse. The population is, therefore, warned for the second time to guard against the danger which may result from this criminal action of our barbarous enemies."

Consequently, in accordance with instructions recently published, any candy found within the borders of the parish must be taken to the Mayor to be sent to the Prefecture, in order to have it analyzed at the military laboratory.

THE MAYOR.

Vadelaincourt, March 30, 1917.

The notice of March 21, posted by the Prefect of the Meuse, read as follows:

REPUBLIC OF FRANCE.

Bar-le-Duc, 21 March, 1917.
Prefecture of the Meuse, First Division.

Candy dropped by the enemy to cause poisoning and disease.

INSTRUCTIONS.

To the Mayors and to the Schoolmasters and Mistresses of the District:

The military authorities have given me a letter of the 9th inst. from the General Commander in Chief, giving notice that German aviators have recently dropped poisoned candy within the English lines.

The text is worded thus:

"German aviators have just dropped candy within the English lines. There would seem to be in this act a first attempt on the part of the enemy to cause outbreaks of poisoning and disease. It therefore seems opportune to put the soldiers and civilians on their guard against eating these candies. It is the duty of those picking them up to send them to the civil or military authorities for analysis. The commanders of the districts in the military zones ought to arrange with the Prefects regarding the instructions to be given to the civilian population."

It is urgently necessary to warn the population of the risks they run in swallowing any candy the origin of which is unknown or suspect. Notices to this effect ought to be placed in all localities.

I have the honor to ask you to be good enough to see that formal instructions are given to parents that any candy found be sent to me at once by the Mayor's Secretary with a note of explanation. I will send it immediately to the military laboratory for analysis.

The Prefect of the Meuse,
AUBERT.

Correspondents at the front alluded to this candy dropping some time ago, but this is the first official proof that the German aviators had adopted the practice.

YOU don't know this girl perhaps. But suppose you did and she came to you for advice! What would you say?

Till yesterday her husband, young and vigorous, had lovingly encouraged her small extravagances and boasted laughingly that his income was ample and growing. He worked with might and main to "gather the fruits of success for his fair trinity at home"—and was succeeding.

But death, swift and relentless, had without warning cut down his guard, and the three he loved more than his own life were now at bay to the world—alone.

If she had come to you for advice—that, briefly, would have been her story.

Her faith was strong. Her husband, she knew, would not leave her with the children to face a financial situation for which there was no solution. Yet when she attempted to calculate the income she would receive from the savings he had left, a panic of fear overcame her.

"The greatest and hardest of her duties now was the one she knew the least about."

Perhaps someone dependent and depending upon you, is destined some day to be left alone—at bay to the world. This is so serious, so appalling a situation that its very contemplation makes thinking men turn cold with apprehension.

That is why we have written "Her Way Out"—to make you realize how serious is the situation which may overtake those for whom you believe no sacrifice or effort is too great.

If, in addition—without the use of technical language or confusing terms—it provides a solution for the dilemma, surely that is another point in its favor, is it not?

We will be pleased to send you a copy of "Her Way Out," free. The coupon below is provided for your convenience. Fill it in and mail it to-day, or a note or postcard will do as well.

Disease.

Diseases are not isolated affections of the single organs or groups of organs in which they manifest themselves—mumps, of the salivary glands; typhoid, of the bowels; consumption, of the lungs; nephritis, of the kidneys; eczema, of the skin, and so on—but are a failure of the body as a whole to carry on its functions, and the particular organs in which the symptoms appear are merely groups of cells that for specific reasons show the defect.

In the New York Medical Journal Dr. Smith Ely Jelliffe, the famous specialist in nervous and mental diseases, says this conception of disease is as old as Hippocrates, but is "too frequently overlooked in an era of absorbing specialistic investigation."

Restriction Did Not Work.

The "Runciman" order, restricting hotel and restaurant luncheons to two courses, and dinners to three courses, is to be rescinded. As a means of reducing the consumption of meat it has proved a failure.

The managers of the leading hotels and restaurants agree that their customers, having to make a complete meal from the substantial items on the menu, have eaten more meat than they did when they were accustomed to take the edge off their appetites with hors d'oeuvre, soup and fish. It is fully expected that potatoes will be ruled out altogether by the new hotel and restaurant meals order.

Formerly steaks weighing about eight ounces and chops weighing from nine to ten ounces were served, but recently butchers have been instructed to cut them weighing not more than four or five ounces. A plate of meat from the joint is now about the same weight, and this, it is thought, will be found to coincide with the new order.

"If we are allowed to go back to old conditions and serve a dinner of five or six courses, limiting the meat and bread by bulk or weight, it will be found more economical all round," is the view of a hotel manager. Our chefs will have to prepare more fancy dishes, but less food will be eaten than under present restrictions."

KEEP THE TOWN CLEAN.

Make it a Campaign to Last as Long as There's Work to Do.

Don't call it a cleanup day or a cleanup week when you start out to really do something to make your town or community a cleaner, safer, healthier place in which to live, suggests a state board of health bulletin. Or, rather, don't let it be the prevailing idea that one day or one week is sufficient in which to clean up and get rid of all nuisances and health dangers. And, what is still more important, don't think that when you have cleaned off a few vacant lots and alleys, set out a few trees and carted off the trash and papers from a few back yards that you have had a successful cleanup campaign. As a matter of fact, you haven't touched the dirty dirt or removed any of the real dangers to health and safety.

It is true that trash and rubbish are unsightly and should be removed, but in comparison to flies and the feeding and breeding places of flies rubbish is not the filthy filth that we think it is. To some people flies may not look as bad as trash, but it is only to those who don't know where they breed, what they eat and the number and kind of disease germs they carry on their feet. It is this kind of filth that a cleanup campaign should go after and clean up.

A cleanup campaign should not stop at a week, at a month or a season unless the town or community has in reality reached the point where it can clean up and keep clean. No spasmodic effort at cleanliness gets results. It does not only fail to get a clean and attractive town, but it is worse than nothing as a means of safeguarding health. The cleanup campaign that is worth while is that which induces the people to clean up and keep clean all the year round and which goes after the dangerous filth—flies, surface closets that admit flies and breeding places for flies. Breeding places for mosquitoes might well be added to the list.

Clean to handle. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and General Stores.

SPRING IN FRANCE.

Tommies Are Helping Peasant to Reclaim Farms.

While the grip of the Germans, clinging desperately to the line they flung from Switzerland to the sea, slowly but steadily is being broken, each backward step means added desolation to a beautiful part of France. The coming of spring emphasized anew how closely the pursuits of peace tread upon the heels of war. Tidy French farms, geometrically precise, reach up to the very domain of the guns and it is possible on many parts of the line, to see old French men and women following ploughs or harrows almost to the very edge of the heavy battery positions.

Shells are tossed near them now and then, but they never seem to mind. The war is nearly three years old now and shells and battle noises have become the normal things of life, not the abnormal ones. It is even possible along older bits of the line in the north to see farmers ploughing both sides of the war zone. At the places less harshly dealt with whence the Germans were driven this spring, many of the trenches already have been filled and the ground is being put under cultivation. Some of the newly sown fields, however, recently have been ripped up by long ranged German guns.

Fighting men who are relieved every little while from front line duty come for a brief rest to the springtide beauties of the back country and the change of surroundings from the cauldron of war to the peace of blossoms and birds is no greater than the transformation of these English Tommies themselves and their brothers from overseas. These men who, under the recspell of battle, shoot, bayonet and bomb to death all who stand before them, become gentle as little children again. One can see these soldiers with the battle fatigue still heavy upon them standing for hours in long lines outside divisional canteens waiting their turn to go in and buy as others stream out laden with cakes and candy.

Grim and resolute in battle, Tommy seems to have a certain simplicity and kindness of heart which makes him react quickly to the normal laws of manhood as soon as the fighting is over. If he has to make a journey by train, he sits in the open doors of box cars with his feet and legs swinging outside. If there is a "movie show" anywhere near, he gladly pays fifty cents to go, always, especially when war scenes happen to be shown, laughing heartily when a shell, bursting nearby, appears to have upset the equilibrium of the man working the camera.

To-day, while resting, a squadron of cavalry was having a water carnival along a pretty little French river. Their band was playing gay airs and all the women, children and old men of the countryside came to see the swimming races, diving contests, and attempts to walk a greasy pole across a swift-running stream. There was a soldier clown, and a great air of merriment all about. A German prisoner taken sometime ago said he could always tell when the British were not going to attack by the fact that the Tommies could be heard singing, especially ragtime.

There are no longer any songs about how long it is from Tipperary, but at work or play or swinging along the roads to battle, nowadays, the Tommies sing about wanting to get back to their home in Tennessee and about having a Kentucky jubilee, without the slightest idea just where Tennessee or Kentucky are.

The Filipino Working Girl.

At Bokod a Filipino girl with two years' training can earn twenty-five cents a day weaving pillow covers, table-runners, or dress material. The food she eats costs five cents a day. She not only earns money for herself and family in addition to taking a complete academic course, but one-half the proceeds from her labor, turned into the school fund, have already provided the school with a fine phonograph, a good collection of records, and the instruments for a ten-piece stringed orchestra, which turns out music that would compare well with the best that graduates from a New England finishing school could do.

The girls of Bokod make their own dresses. That doesn't mean that they go down to a store, pick out three kinds of cloth, the right kind of thread, a paper pattern, and a package of sewing machine needles and then slap the thing together until the dressmaker can come and really make something out of the materials so enthusiastically misused. They weave the materials themselves and make it into dresses, and in addition send dress materials and finished dresses to other schools where industrial work is more advanced.

The Mysteries of Rain.

It is usually supposed that the downpour of rain that sometimes follows a flash of lightning is due to the coalescence of fine drops on losing their electrical charge, but a Finnish observer concludes that the thunder jars the drops together. Near Vasa a heavy thunderstorm came up from the east late one afternoon, and, as the sun was unclouded, a brilliant double rainbow appeared in the east for half an hour, arching from horizon to horizon. At each roll of thunder the rainbows seemed to be much shaken, the wedge being displaced and the colors blurred. This could not be due to the lightning, and it seemed that the same cause might enlarge the raindrops and disturb the rainbow.

An Amphibious Craft.

Between Lyngby and Foerum in Denmark there operates a craft which travels on land or in the water with equal facility. The course between the two towns is mostly by water, but is interrupted in one place by a strip of land 1,000 feet wide. Across this a track has been built with its rails extending into and under the water. As the craft, which is primarily a boat, nears the shore its course is guided by posts in the water. As soon as the wheels located on the bottom of the boat strike the submerged rails, a lever is thrown automatically which stops the propeller and starts the wheels. When the boat leaves the land for the water on the other side the reverse process takes place.

Philippine Fruits.

There have been found in the Philippines two fruits entirely unknown to Europe and even to America. One of these is the durian, which grows on a lofty tree somewhat resembling an elm, is about as large as a cocoanut, has a shiny shell, and contains a creamy pulp which combines some of the flavors of delicious custard with those of a fine cheese. American soldiers in the Philippines have dubbed the durian the "vegetable Limburger." The other rare fruit is the mangosteen; but the exquisitely-flavored liquid it contains has not yet been successfully preserved for shipping abroad.

13 CALVES BORN TO THIS COW DURING PAST NINE YEARS

GUELPH, Sept. 7—James Grant, a farmer residing near Mimosa, owns a cow that long ago, to be exact, nine years, responded to the call of patriotism and production. During her nine years of existence this Shorthorn cudchewer has given birth to thirteen live and healthy calves, including three pairs of twins. The first twins were males, second females, and the last pair,b ron a week ago, males. The second pair were born in 1916, which gives the bovine the distinction of bearing four calves in a year.

The last calf is a sure "nuff" youngest of a large family." Instead of being forsed to wear brother's old trousers, the unfortunate bovine was born minus a tail. It is no cinch being the youngest of a family apparently.

FIGHTS TO THE LAST GASP.

The Pecsary Is a Vicious Pig, and Is Without Fear or Mercy.

An old "Arkansaw razorback" is considered by native hunters as no less dangerous than a bear and as far more likely to attack a human being without provocation; the wild boar of England and the continent was renowned in sport because it would fight and fight hard; the African wart hog, which weighs 300 pounds and has tusks eight inches long, shows little fear of any antagonist meaner than a lion, but of all the hog tribe the most vicious, "stick at nothing" daredevil is the javelina. Not only does it fight to its last breath with a berserker rage, but is a disciplined warrior that never was known to ignore the "battle cry" of its clan.

In the southwest a hunter before firing into a drove of javelinas carefully inspects the trees for one that he can easily climb. However skillful he was with a rifle, he could hardly expect to stop the charge of a dozen or more javelinas, and if they reached him he would have no chance. Once the peccaries got him down they would never cease their shrill, fighting squeals until they had torn him to shreds; hence the rule in the javelina country is to climb your tree first and shoot your pig afterward—shoot it so dead that it cannot emit a single squeal; otherwise you must be prepared to roost in the tree for half a day or so.—Youth's Companion.

Seven Days King.

Masaniello (Thomas Aniello), born 1622, was known as the "Seven Days King." He headed a revolt against the Duke of Arcos at Naples, July 7, 1647, forced him to abolish the tax on provisions and for seven days was master of Naples. He was most arrogant and bloodthirsty and was assassinated July 16. He is the hero of two operas, one by Caraffa, called "Masaniello," and the other by Auber (libretto by Scribe), called "La Muette de Portici."

HOGS FEATURE STOCK MARKET

Price Jumped $1 Per Cwt. to $18.50 During Week—Packers Look For a Quick Drop

STOCKS ARE STEADY

Separate heading for this First side.

As far as prices are concerned the Toronto live stock markets were practically featureless. Some movements of secondary importance, however, were noticeable, such as the steady demand and price of most of the small meats, particularly lambs. Another outstanding incident in the week's trading was the dearth of choice cattle in spite of many inquiries. Receipts for this week were not quite up to the heavy run of the past few weeks, taking the aggregate, but on Monday the local market saw the heaviest run of cattle for the season, and on Thursday the lightest run of hogs in nearly twenty years.

In the cattle section anything with weight and quality found good demand, especially extra good for heavy steers, weighing 1,200 pounds and upwards. This grade of stock is wanted for export and buyers appeared prepared to pay top prices if they could get the goods. Sheep and lambs sold at strong prices all throught the week. The best lambs brought between $15 and $15.50 per cwt. Light sheep were steady at prices ranging between $9 and $11. During the last few hours of the week's trading lamb prices eased about fifty cents.

When the market opened on Monday not only was the record run of the previous opening day surpassed, but traders saw the only supply of choice cattle, shipped in during the week. They were snapped up at prices ranging up to $12.50. On Monday too, all kinds of stock reached their high water mark for the week, with the notable exception of hogs, which played an exclusive part in the live stock repertoire.

HOW THE HOGS WENT.

On Monday hogs opened at $17.50 per cwt., fed. That was what the packers offered, but very little trading was done until the dying hours of the market to-day, because buyers and salesmen each thought they would be getting the worst of such a bargain. By Thursday, however, buyers for the big packing houses paid $18.25 for the meagre supply, at the same time stoutly declaring that they would cease to operate and not buy at all next week unless the drovers will accept substantially lower prices. They claim that hogs are not as expensive on other Canadian markets or in Chicago as they are in Toronto.

The shipments of hogs into the local market have fallen off considerably in the past three weeks. This week's total is 4,803; last week the formers sent in 7,380, and two weeks ago, 8,955. Those were the days of record prices, while at the present time not only are prices comparatively uninteresting to the farmers, but they themselves are, in addition, too busy with their grain and other farm work to market whatever stocks they have. The next few weeks, will, no doubt, develop some interesting changes in the market situation.

Record Bean Crop Reported

In recent jubilation over the country's excellent crop prospects, one important factor was overlooked. The humble bean has leaped into prominence which almost justified our ranking it with King Corn. The production of navy beans—which might just as well be called "army beans"—represents a remarkable agricultural achievement.

The recorded bean crop of the country has stood, in recent years, at about 10,000,000 bushels. The 1915 crop was 10,321,000 bushels and the 1916 crop 8,846,000. These figures represent only the output of the six leading bean States, California, Michigan, New York, Colorado, New Mexico and Wisconsin.

Well, this year four States alone have raised 22,141,000 bushels of beans. And they have done it by increasing their bean acreage by 184 per cent. Michigan alone, with its 8,281,000 bushels, has almost duplicated the output of the whole country for last year. California is a close second, with 7,268,000 bushels. Then follow New York with 2,935,000 bushels, and Colorado with 2,601,000

Other States yet to be heard from will no doubt add several million bushels. But the production mentioned is in itself reason for national self-congratulation. There will be beans for everybody. We could feed all the armies in the world, with that crop. The bean allowance to soldiers is 400 ration to a bushel. The crop of our four great bean States would make a full year's rations for more than 24,000,000 soldiers.—Arizona Gazette.

Stomach Cramps COLIC

These are very painful and their attacks are often sudden, and sometimes fatal. The principal seat is in the stomach and bowels, producing severe twisting, cramping pain, and often acompanied by vomiting. If you are troubled in this way, there is only one remedy to cure you, and that one is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It has a record of cures extending over 72 years, and we have yet to hear of a case where it has failed to either relieve or cure.

Beware of imitations and substitutes sold by unscrupulous dealers for the sake of greater profits, as these no-name, no-reputation, worthless preparations may prove dangerous to your health.

Mrs. H. Miller, 735 Mark St., Fort William, Ont., writes: "Last summer my husband came home from work, and could hardly straighten up for cramps. The first thing I gave him was a dose of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and I hadn't repeated it very long until he was all right again. It is the only remedy I give my children in the summer for cholera or cramps in the stomach. I have never been without it in the house for the last two or three years."

Says the Sun Didn't Stand Still.

Joshua's command to the sun and moon to "stand still" only meant that they should be "eclipsed," according to Dr. Thomas Dick Wilson, professor of Hebrew at Princeton Theological seminary. The word usually translated "stand still" in the Bible is the Hebrew "damm," said Dr. Wilson which really means "eclipse." "When my students come to me," he said, "with doubt as to whether God actually upset the laws of gravitation at the request of Joshua I say 'Don't worry. Nothing of the kind took place.'"—Philadelphia North American.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Wear smoked glasses while on the beach. Your eyes should always be protected from the heat and glare of the sun.

Daily bathing and copious drinking of water have a magic effect upon the complexion in clearing blemishes and in imparting a delicacy of colouring which only a well flushed system can produce.

Out door exercises are stimulating to various organs. Where sport is not available, tramping proves an excellent tonic, while the deep breathing lends colour to the cheeks and sparkle to the eye. Sleep and rest are likewise magical beautifiers, they restore lost contour, fade out the wrinkles and revive the complexion.

An excellent exercise to straighten round shoulders—good for girls or women who have to sit a good deal—is performed by placing a thin stick or wand across the back and letting it run through the bent elbows. The arms are bent so that the hands rest on the chest. Keep the Arms and shoulders pressed back and down, and walk about the room in this way for five or ten minutes.

A MESSAGE TO WOMEN!!

LET a woman ease your suffering. I want you to write, and let me tell you of my simple method of home treatment, send you ten days' free trial, postpaid, and put you in touch with women in Canada who will gladly tell what my method has done for them.

If you are troubled with weak, tired feelings, headache, backache, bearing down sensations, bladder weakness, constipation, catarrhal conditions, pain in the sides, regularly or irregularly, bloating, sense of falling or misplacement of internal organs, nervousness, desire to cry, palpitation, hot flashes, dark rings under the eyes, or a loss of interest in life, write to me to-day. Address: Mrs. M. Summers, Box 917 Windsor, Ont.

HOME DEFENCE

The safeguarding of your home and all it means to you is not a matter of armies and ships alone. The comfort and happiness of your family are exposed to the attacks of enemies much nearer to them than the marauding Huns of Central Europe.

What will become of your home and your wife and your children, if you be suddenly stricken down as thousands of others have been?

Will there be any bulwark of defence to keep the home and the family from destruction?

You can most easily provide such a line of defence by means of a life assurance policy. Home Defence is its purpose and it fulfils that purpose as nothing else can.

FOOD SUPPLY FOR THE ALLIES

THE golden grain, of Western Canada, much of which will go to the Allies, is now being gathered in. Reports from the West are extremely favorable, and it is estimated that the yield will be large. The Canadian Pacific Railway has made every provision for the transportation of the great harvest along its lines. Troubles of a few years back have all been overcome — to the satisfaction of the grain grower. The Canadian Pacific has opened up huge tracts of land for the settler and made it easy for him, not only to purchase the land, but stock and cultivate it. The introduction of irrigation into Alberta was the means of making it possible to till the soil that was previously considered waste. Many millions of dollars have already been spent by the C. P. R. on irrigation canals and dams, the greatest of which is the Bassano Dam at the Bow River, one of the most wonderful pieces of engineering work that has ever been accomplished. The important feature in connection with the wheat lands of the prairie provinces is that they rank as "hard" wheat producing—the kind of wheat the millers like. The demand for wheat is steadily increasing, while the area of hard wheat in the United States is just as steadily diminishing. The hard wheat farmer of Minnesota and the Dakotas is, therefore, coming up to Western Canada, where he finds the peculiar advantages of soil and climate, which are necessary to this profitable crop. Canada West stands foremost in the world as the wheat producing country, but happily, the farmers are beginning to realize the value of the "mixed farm," and not only are they producing the bread of the country, but also the meat, butter, and eggs. Furthermore the market gardener is also to the fore, and he is finding considerable recompense.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Greenhorn

By F. A. MITCHEL

Johnny Ormsby was walking on the street one day when he was accosted by a man, who said to him:

"Young man, would you like to make some money?"

"I certainly would."

"Give me your name and address."

Johnny gave both, and the stranger made a note of them.

"Can you keep a secret?"

"I think I can."

"Well, here's a twenty dollar bill for you and a box. Take care of the box for me till I call for it and I'll give you another $20. Don't you give the box to any one else."

Johnny made the required promise; the man gave him the box and went his way.

The transaction had taken place within less than a minute, and Johnny was left looking after the man, who was walking away from him. Johnny was about eighteen, but not yet well versed in the ways of the world, especially of the commercial world. He thought at first he would open the box at once, but concluded to take it to his room. He was a country boy who had come to the city to find a job and lived in a lodging house.

As soon as he was alone Johnny unrolled the bill, and, true enough, it was a twenty dollar note. Being pretty near out of money, it was very acceptable to him. Of course he wondered why the man had hired him to take care of a box and was curious to know what was in it. It was about an inch and a half square and covered with blue plush. Opening it, there nestled a ring set with two diamonds, each as big as a large pea.

Naturally Johnny was very much astonished. Not being used to city ways, he did not reach a conclusion that the thing had been stolen and the thief had found it best to get rid of it. What object could any one have in asking him to take care of property so valuable? Johnny racked his brain for some time, then gave it up. There was a cornice in his room, and, standing upon his bureau, he put the property on the cornice. Descending to the floor, he was satisfied that it could not be seen. Probably it was in about as safe a place as it could be put.

Not finding a position, Johnny lived on the $20 that had been given him. When it was all gone he began to get hungry. The longer he went without eating the weaker he became. At last he took to his bed.

One day there were sounds of footsteps coming up the stairs and a rap at Johnny's door. He said "Come in" so faintly that he was not heard, but this made no difference to his callers, for they entered anyway, a well dressed gentleman and a policeman.

"Are you John Ormsby?" asked the gentleman.

"Yes, sir."

"Did a man some time ago give you a box containing a diamond ring to keep?"

"Yes."

"Well, I want it."

"He told me to give it to no one but him."

"Oh, he did, did he? Well, young man, that ring was stolen. The man has been arrested for other thefts and to secure immunity has agreed to return every article he has taken. He told me to come to you and get the ring."

"I don't know what he told you," said Johnny. "He gave me a twenty dollar bill to take care of the property and said I was to give it to no one but him."

"Come off, young man," said the policeman. "You can't make the gentleman believe you're so green as all that."

"Why are you lying in bed?" asked the gentleman. "Are you sick?"

"No. I haven't had anything to eat for several days."

"What's become of the money the man gave you?"

"All gone for food."

"Have you got the ring?"

"Yes."

The gentleman looked at the boy in wonder. "Why didn't you get some money for it?"

"I don't own it."

The gentleman looked at the policeman; the policeman returned the glance. "He is a greenhorn and no mistake," said the latter.

"Do you mean to tell me," asked the gentleman, "that you're lying here starving with a diamond ring worth $500 in your possession?"

"That's about it, sir."

"Well, here's a dollar; go get something to eat, but first give me the ring."

"I couldn't give it to any one except the man that left it with me."

"Don't bother with him, sir; I'll run him in," said the cop.

"No, you won't. I know an honest face when I see one. Take the cab to the jail and bring the crook here. I'll wait for you."

Within half an hour the man who had intrusted Johnny with the ring appeared in care of the cop and told Johnny to give it to the gentleman.

"Not till I get the other $20 you promised me," said Johnny.

There was a burst of laughter, and the owner of the ring produced the money, and Johnny told them where to look for the ring.

John Ormsby was taken into the employ of the owner of the ring and now has charge of all his securities.

German Science in the War.

Professor Roth of Griefswald, Germany, gives an account of some of the accomplishments of German science since the war in the Dusseldorf General Anzieger. He says in part: "In the first place, Germany has learned in this war to make use of her water power for the production of electricity. This has been necessary for purposes of coal economy. This use of water power has powerfully contributed to the saving of human labor, with the result that Germany can now produce electrical energy almost as cheaply as the countries possessing an unlimited supply of water power. Numerous industrial concerns have undergone a process of modernization which secures to them still greater advantages than before."

A description of the expansion and renovation of the iron and steel industry, especially in the production of the finer types of metals, follows, and mention is made of the discovery of surprising substitutes for copper, which Germany has been lacking. In the field of chemistry, he adds, rapid advances have been made from the laboratory to the manufacturing stage in the synthetic production of important organic compounds, as well as of such war materials as rubber and explosives. "Above all, the chemical conquest of the air for agriculture has made great progress," he continues. "The business of extracting nitrogen from the atmosphere has been so successful that in 1917 the Government will be able to dispose of five million tons of nitrous manure, which is four times the amount needed in peace time. The equally difficult problem of the production of glycerine, toluol, benzol, sulphuric acid, has also been solved." —Don E. Mowry in American Industry.

Modest Madame Joffre.

Parisians are familiar with the small mansion occupied by Marshal and Mme. Joffre at Passy, Rue Michel-Ange. The couple lived there in perfect harmony. Thanks to the radiating kindness of Mme. Joffre, her husband always found in their home regularity, rest, relaxation, joy. Like most French wives, Mme. Joffre is animated, cheerful, modest, industrious, possessed of a sober elegance and an affection for her home which makes her put it above everything else. In the midst of celebrity she has always shunned notoriety; and she sought refuge from the tributes won by her excellent heart and illustrious name in work, in the peaceful seclusion of the family. It is said that the dream of the couple is to buy, after the war is over, a motor houseboat, and thus to cruise anonymously along the rivers of their beloved France to which the marshal will have been the first to give the assurance of victory.—Jules Pois in the Bookman.

Are YOU Missing Something that Millions Enjoy?

Why do you suppose the majority of men on this continent who can afford the money for shaving satisfaction, are using the Gillette Safety Razor?

Why is the Gillette a treasured item of equipment in the kit of practically every officer and of tens of thousands of men in the Canadian Overseas Forces?

Only one reason could possibly hold good with so many level-headed men. It's this—the Gillette gives a shave, day in and day out, that no other razor in the world has ever equalled—and does it handily in five minutes or less. That is why over a million more men everywhere are adopting the Gillette every year.

YOU would appreciate this as much as any other man! The saving of time—the independence of barber shops—the resulting economy—and above all the matchless comfort of the clean, quick Gillette shave—these are real, personal advantages which you must not longer miss.

The War Needs of Canada

THE NEED FOR GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF MUNITION PLANTS

BY BENJAMIN ANTHORP GOULD

NINE

The facts that the contracts for Canadian-made munitions are not being largely renewed upon their completion may render it unnecessary to consider the question of government control at any great length. According to the best information I can get, it seems improbable that any very great quantities of munitions will be henceforward shipped from Canada, and it is usually thought that the reason for this is that the British plants are now capable of turning out the necessary quantities at a cost certainly no greater than that of munitions produced in Canada. It is clearly much to the benefit of the Imperial Government if possible to have the work on the shells, which constitutes their chief cost, done at home rather than here, because if a vessel carrying munitions is sunk by a submarine the loss in case the cargo consists only of raw material for shells is but a fraction of that where the cargo is made up of completed shells. Nevertheless, it may be useful to consider what has been done in the past, together with its present effect upon the efficiency of the country.

At the beginning of the war the need for munitions was so great that the questions of cost were entirely unimportant in comparison with prompt deliveries. As a consequence some of the earlier contracts were at prices which permitted of exorbitant profits, and those factories which were operated with wisdom and efficiency earned entirely disproportionate returns upon their investments. They also had such need for operators that they paid wages such as have never before been heard of in Canada, and they were none the less able to make very large profits. The practical results of contracts made by the old shell committee were such as to create an intense feeling against the owners of munitions plants as profiteers of the worst kind. There was at least one instance of a manufacturer turning back to the government a huge sum of money which he had earned and which, he declared that as a patriotic citizen he did not feel justified in retaining. The example of this man was not, however, followed to any large extent.

The present Imperial Munitions Board has gone into the matter of Canadian production of munitions on a much more businesslike basis, and has, I am informed, fixed prices which will return a fair profit to the manufacturer providing his plant is efficiently organized. The exorbitant profits of earlier days have been done away with, and the possibility of profit by plants not suited to the production of munitions or under incapable management has been eliminated.

In figuring the cost of production the Imperial Munitions Board has, however, been compelled to take into consideration wages almost as high as those paid at the beginning. It is admittedly one of the most difficult things in economics to reduce wages which have been unduly high, especially at a time when there is a shortage of labour, and consequently the cost of munitions to the Imperial Government has been, and is now, much greater than would have been the case if wages had not originally been boosted to unheard of heights. I personally know of case after case where young and inexperienced girls working in munition plants have earned from twenty-five to forty dollars a week. However, much we may admire the spirit which has made girls of good family, who have never before done any work, willing to give up their pleasure and to labour in munition plants, none the less we cannot fail to see the economic harm which is done to the country by the payment of such wages.

Much more serious, however, than the immediate cost of such wages has been the harm done to other industries by stripping them bare of workers who have sought the higher wages obtainable in munitions. The practical break-down of the railway system a year ago was in a great measure attributed to the fact that the skilled mechanics necessary to keep the locomotives in proper running condition were not obtainable, as they had in great part gone into munition work where the return for their labour was two or three times as great as it would have been in the railway round houses. This is only an instance of the way in which the high wages paid to munition workers has affected the other industries of the country.

Almost the same criticism which have been made in reference to the production of munitions may also with justice be made in regard to other industries which have sprung up since 1914 to take care of other war requirements of the country. These industries are a result of the war, and a clear distinction should be made between them and those industries which were already in existence and which have merely continued or extended their previous operations. It is in regard to the new industries that the accusations of profiteering can be most fairly made, and it is to them that any excess profits tax should be made to bear most heavily. The old industries can in most cases be prevented from making undue profits by a proper regulation of prices.

Even should the amount of munitions to be produced in Canada be henceforth comparatively small, there is the prospect that the plants which have hitherto been producing them will be kept very busy in other war work. It is probable that every well equipped machine-shop will be able to obtain contracts for making parts for marine engines to the full extent of its capacity, and that the necessity for government control of prices payable both for the finished product and for wages will be as important as ever. The workman engaged in producing the requirements of war should no more be permitted to receive exorbitant wages than should the contractor who supplies them be allowed to get exorbitant profits. One form of profiteering is in theory as bad as the other, and in the aggregate there may be little difference between th cost of them to the tax payers. If the various labour unions are able to establish union rates of wages which they consider just, there is no reason why the government in times like these cannot do the same, and fix a standardized scale of pay. The government can and should, I believe, go far to reduce the cost of living to the workman, and the workman has no just cause for complaint if his pay is made proportionate to his service and to the cost of living on a scale no lower than that to which he has been accustomed.

More especially, if under the selective draft the skilled workman is relieved from the obligation of military service, he should not be permitted to take advantage of this exemption by the exploitation of his skill at the cost of the country which has given him his special privileges. It would be entirely proper to make his exemption conditional upon his willingness to work wherever and at the wage the government may require.

RUSS CAPITAL SHOCKED.

Great Masses Thronged Streets—Fall of Riga Was Officially Known Yesterday.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 6.—The fall of Riga, made officially known yesterday, shocked the Russian capital. Despite the recent prohibition against crowds on the streets, great masses of people assembled on downtown corners to discuss the blow to Russia's prestige.

DIPLOMATIC FORMS.

The "Protocol" Is "the Code of International Politeness."

In these days of official notes and replies the public is becoming familiar with the language of the diplomatic document, and even those who never heard of the famous protocol, which lies in the archives of the foreign office in Paris, must have noticed the similarity of form which characterizes such expressions. The "protocole diplomatique," which was probably drawn up in the time of Louis XIV., is a body of ceremonial rules to be observed in all written or personal official intercourse between the heads of different states or their ministers. It goes into the minutest detail as to the styles and title to be given to states, their heads and their public ministers, and indicates "the forms and courtesies to be observed in all international acts."

The protocol is, in fact, what M. Pradier-Fodere, a well known authority on the subject, has described it, "the code of international politeness," for, as time went on, all nations gradually began to adopt the same forms, until today the code may be said to be practically universal in its application. It devotes special attention to such matters as the ending of a letter. Thus, as a recent writer has pointed out, when the British foreign minister concludes a letter to the British ambassador at Washington with the words, "I am, with great truth and respect, sir, your excellency's most obedient, humble servant," he is governed by precedent even in such a detail as giving "sir" a line to itself.—Christian Science Monitor.

Soap Making.

Soap making was known to the ancient Romans, and there is a theory that they obtained their knowledge of the art from some Germanic tribes who had learned it from some of the tribes further to the west and north. Pliny mentioned that the Germans used both hard and soft soap, and he indicates that it was a discovery which had been made by the Gauls.

ITALIAN PRISONERS MORE THAN 30,000

GERMAN WAR CRAFT IN THE GULF OF RIGA

No Further Advance On The Riga Front Reported To-day

German War Ships Appear in Gulf However and Are Repulsed By Russian Shore Batteries---German Attacks in Lorraine and At Other Points on the Western Front Broken Up By the French Fire.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, September 8.—German war craft have been sighted in the Gulf of Riga and have been shelled by Russian coast batteries, the War Office announced. Russian torpedo boats have discovered a German submarine, and enemy ships, apparently trawlers, were observed in Irbinskoj. They were forced by the Russian batteries to retire. No further advance by the Germans on the Riga front is reported in to-day's official communication. Russian troops have been reconnoitred by German cavalry.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

ROME, September 8.—More than thirty thousand prisoners have been taken during the Italian offensive, the War Office announces to-day.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, September 8.—During the night several attacks undertaken by the enemy in Lorraine, east of Rheims, north of Courcy, and in the region of Cerny, were broken up by our fire. We made successful incursions into the German lines near Epine De Crevregny and north of Hill 344. On the right bank of the Meuse we took prisoners. There was violent artillery fighting on both banks of the Meuse. Along Forges Brook and in the region of Avercourt patrolling operations were unusually active. Everywhere else the night was calm.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, September 8. — In patrol fighting on the Ypres front last night the enemy suffered considerable casualties northeast of St. Julien, says to-day's official statement. In the neighbourhood of Gazrelle a successful raid was carried out by a small party of our troops. Lagnicourt was heavily shelled by the enemy yesterday evening, and there was considerable hostile artillery activity at other points later in the night. No infantry action developed.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

VIENNA, September 8.—Emperor Charles has commuted to eighteen years' penal servitude the death sentence of Dr. Friederich Adler for the assassination of Premier Stuergkh at Vienna last October.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

ROME, September 8.—Only three Italian ships were sunk during the week ending September 2, it is officially announced.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

HAVRE, Wednesday, delayed.—Following official communication dealing with the campaign in East Africa has been issued by the Belgian War Office: "The Germans have retreated to the south bank of the Kelimbero River in East Africa before the convergent advance of Belgian and British troops."

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

COPENHAGEN, September 8.—The Vossische Zeigung states that two persons were killed and three seriously injured in an airplane attack on the town of Lahr, Germany, on September 4.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

COPENHAGEN, September 8.—Leading German military critics consider that with the capture of important naval bases at Riga and Duenamunde, the operations on the Riga front have virtually been ended, says a Berlin despatch to the National Tidende. It is considered too late in the year to advance further, as this would require the building of new roads and the establishment of depots. On this account the despatch says it is unlikely that Field Marshal Von Hindenburg will permit the troops to continue the advance with Petrograd as an objective.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

AMSTERDAM, September 8.—Emperor William has arrived at Riga, a Berlin despatch reports. He reviewed the troops and distributed decorations.

THE BIG PATRICK SHOWS ATTRACTION FOR THE EXHIBITION

Visitors to the Peterboro' Industrial Will Have An Opportunity of Seeing Famous Carnival Aggregation of Amusements

A CIRCUS IN ITSELF

The Peterboro Industrial Exhibition directors have made a ten strike in securing for the Exhibition next week the B. H. Patrick Greater Shows.

This aggregation is composed of some of the leading attractions in the amusement world. Ten big shows are carried and almost every kind of amusement is provided.

The principal feature is the Royal Stadium Circus, which is composed of trained animals and circus features of various kind.

The athletic show also comes in for mention on account of the fact that it is one that teaches all elements of the athletic world.

The Garden of Allah is the show that depicts Oriental life in the far east in reality. The Museum of Wonders with the strange people and freaks, always attracts more than passing notice.

Other shows are Diavale's Novelty Show, Baby Emma, and the famous fat girl. Zema the snake girl, and of course there will be the merry-go-round, and the Ferris Wheel.

A few months ago the Patrick Shows were in Lindsay, and here is an appreciation of their patriotic work from Lady Hughes:

Lindsay, Ont., July 3, 1917.

To the Daughters of the Empire:

Our chapter of I.O.D.E. of Lindsay unhesitatingly recommend the methods employed by Mr. J. C. Harley, advance agent of the Patrick Shows.

We received most courteous treatment from Mr. Harley and Mr. Patrick. We have had a booth on the show grounds for a week and have made a large sum of money from our war work. We heartily approve of the work Mr. Harley is doing for the welfare of returned soldiers, who have made such sacrifices for the Empire.

I am, sincerely yours,
(Lady) Mary Hughes,
Regent, I.O.D.E.

CORP. HAROLD SPIERS OF 93rd BATTALION IS KILLED IN ACTION

Otonabee Boy Lays Down His Life in France---Another Otonabee Member of the 93rd is Wounded---Veterans Are Digging Themselves in at the Exhibition Grounds ---To-day's General Military News.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

OTTAWA, Sept. 8. — The proportion of killed in action and died of wounds continues high in the casualty lists. In the noon list to-day 119 out of 253 Canadians listed are given as having lost their lives. The last two or three lists received have been shorter, but containing more death totals.

KILLED IN ACTION.

WOUNDED.

Corp. H. V. Pickle, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, Otonabee.

CORP. HAROLD SPIERS.

Mrs. Spiers, of Lang, Otonabee Township, has received official word from Ottawa that her son, Corp. Harold Spiers, a well known Otonabee boy, who enlisted in the 93rd Battalion, was killed in action on August 21st. Corp. Spiers went overseas with the 93rd Battalion and was transferred to the 18th Battalion at the front. He was nineteen years of age.

CORP. H. V. PICKLE.

Another Dell-known Otonabee boy, who went overseas with the 93rd Battalion, is in the casualty list today, an official message to his relatives stating that he has been admitted to No. 1 Canadian Hospital, Etaples, wounded.

LIEUT. B. J. TAIT.

Lieut. B. J. Tait, formerly of the Tait Optical Company in Peterborough, and a former officer of the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers has been wounded. The Hamilton Times says:

Word has been received that Lieut. B. J. Tait has been wounded, but this was followed this morning by a second message, announcing that his injuries were very slight, and that he had returned to his post. His home is 121 Charles street, this city. Lieut. Tait had a commission in the Ninety-first Canadian Highlanders before the war, and enlisted with the 173rd Highland Battalion, from which he was transferred to a commission in the Fifteenth. He has been in France for months. Lieut. Tait is an optician, a member of the Canadian Bi-focal Company, and his brother Capt. Tait, is also overseas

THE MODEL TRENCH.

Peterborough's Veterans of the Great War who have been under the delusion that they were through with "digging themselves in," building dug-outs and stringing barb wire entanglements have found out their mistake during the past few days. Every afternoon and evening now finds a little squad of returned men hard at work at the Exhibition Grounds, with pick and shovel, digging trenches and filling sand bags, preparing the model trench which will be a big feature of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition.

Any one who fancies filling hundreds of sand bags is a light occupation should pay a visit to the scene of activities. It is heavy work for men in the best of health and some of the War Veterans by no means answer to that description. They are sticking to it, however, as they stick to it in the real thing over in Flanders and the industry and zeal of the returned men should be rewarded during the Exhibition by a steady stream of visitors.

When completed the trench will be a complete reproduction of a front line trench, such as are in use in France. A communication trench leads into the fire trench in which there are two bays and two dug-outs. A thousand sand bags have been sent up from the Ordnance Stores at Kingston, through the instrumentality of Lieut.-Col Ackerman, and a Lewis machine gun, signalling outfits and complete active service equipment have also been provided from the same source.

OTTAWA, Sept. 7.—The large number of senior officers in England who were surplus to requirements led to the issue of an order some time ago by Lieut.-Gen Sir Richard Turner, commanding the Canadian forces in the British Isles, giving these officers the option of reverting to the rank of lieutenant or returning to Canada. This order was issued because the demands from the front for officers above the rank of lieutenant were comparatively few, and unattached senior officers in England might wait there a long time before being called to the firing line. The order provided that all senior officers over forty years of age, unless possessed of special qualifications or proven physically fit, should return to Canada, without the option of reverting to the rank of lieutenant. In the case of senior officers reverting to the rank of lieutenant, it was provided that there should be no decrease in the amount of their separation allowances.

An official of the Militia Department stated that in the event of a senior officer refusing to accept the lower rank and returning to Canada he would be liable to service under the Military Service Act. Any man, no matter whether he had gone overseas or not, if he had not actually seen service at the front and been discharged, would be liable under the Act.

WOMEN OF PETERBORO' WILLING TO CO-OPERATE

Representatives of Women's Societies at Enthusiastic Meeting Decide to Assist Food Controller in His Work.

IMPRESSIVE ADDRESSES

The campaign to educate the people of Peterborough to the means of defeating the Kaisers threat of Germany's victory through starvation of the allies was begun yesterday afternoon when the presidents and representatives of the Women's Societies in Peterborough met to confer on a definite campaign to reach all the homes in the city and spread the Food Controller's message of the danger of rationing or famine in this country and starvation of the men at the front.

Mr. Aylmer.

The meeting was opened by Mr. J. A. Aylmer, who in ashort speech outlined the object of the formation of the Women's Auxiliary of the Resources committee, the latter which was formed for food conservation and to help the farmers in food production and what we need to feed the allies. Men have done their part in assisting the farmers. Women, the government realised must do theirs by rigid economy in the home. Statistics show American and Canadian women are the most wasteful in the world. This condition, to help win the war, must be overcome. While as yet we are not reduced to rations we may be. Delegates from Peterborough attended the recent Women's Auxiliary called by the government, and have kept in touch with the Resources committee, and they will endeavour to educate the public to the fact that the chance of rationing is lessened by economy in the homes.

Mrs. W. R. Morris Presided.

Mrs. W. R. Morris, who presided, and who was chosen delegate from the city to the executive of the Auxiliary, said that at the conference in July the Executive was advised not to form any new organization, but to work through the societies to reach the homes and for this reason yesterday's meeting was called.

Mr. Wearing.

Mr. Wearing, in his address, expressed his high approval of the power of women. He said he came as secretary to the local organization of Resources committee to show his interest in the new procedure, and in the work women have done and will do. He said that we who live in the land of plenty cannot realise the want felt in allied countries. There are twenty million men drawn from the productive into the consumer's class, ten millions at least from the field; because of this, and the added fact that a large percentage of the grain and produce ships are sunk, a difficult problem in feeding the armies is faced.

The ultimate decision of the war may be made during the winter we are now facing, and the food question may have a good deal to do with the decision. This situation may only be overcome by the conservation of food in the homes. Some have practised economy, but with the majority there has been waste. Back yard gardens alone have yielded millions, in Peterborough thousands of dollars. Hundreds of men have produced all the food they required in their homes for the winter. Hhe Premier's message of the need of men to harvest the immense crop in the west got thousands of city men and the crop which it seemed doubtful if could be managed, was brought in. If now some educational work can be done in the home, women may do their part in defeating Germany.

Mrs. F. Neal.

Mrs. F. Neal briefly outlined the work done by the women who attend-

GERMANY MUST GET RID OF KAISER TO TERMINATE WAR

United States Administration Agrees With France That It Would Be Madness to Enter Into Negotiations With the Kaiser

AN IMPORTANT STATEMENT

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

(By Robert J. Bender, U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

(Copyright 1917 by the United Press.)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8. — Full suffrage for a Germany rid of Hohenzollernism, the right of disputed territories to speak for their own futures, and restitution and restoration for those countries trodden underfoot during the war, means peace. Nothing short of this can terminate the war.

To clear the confusion caused by the State Department's recent announcement in apparent conflict with President Wilson's reply to the Pope, the United Press sought and obtained to-day a semi-official interpretation of the Administration's actual attitude, an interpretation vouched for by the highest authorities. The Allies cannot talk peace with the Hohenzollerns in the opinion of Administration officials. The German people should act promptly to eliminate entirely this dynasty and abandon all militaristic rule, if the war is not to go on indefinitely. Bluff reform, such as merely making the Chancellor subject to the will of the Reichstag, is not sufficient. There must be a clear knowledge among the Allies of the full responsibility of the Germanic powers to their people. The acceptability of Germany's internal reforms will not depend upon the decision of the United States, or England, or France, but must be such as "the other people of the world would be justified in accepting." This point, it is stated, is one of the most important in the President's reply to the Pope. It seems in fact the United States believes all the Allies and the rest of the world shall act as a court of judgment on Germany's internal reforms. The United States will be guided in its peace opinions largely by nations which have had the most experience with Germany — France for example. France believes it would be madness to enter peace negotiations with the Kaiser. So does the United States.

Big Fight On The War Time Election Act

Liberals Will Adopt Every Parliamentary Artifice to Block Measure

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 8.—"Absolute rot," said a prominent Liberal today, in commenting on a report that the Liberal party will use physical violence in attempting to prevent the passage of the War Times Election Act. There will undoubtedly be a big fight on the issue, especially in the earlier stages, but nothing of the kind mentioned is contemplated. If it appears possible to block the act by legitimate means, the party will do so, and every parliamentary artifice will be adopted to that end. But if this seems impossible, it would not be at all surprising to see the opposition collapse after the second reading. They regard the bill as an iniquitous measure, but there is nothing to be gained by blockade unless such blockade has reasonable promise of success.

CANADIANS DECORATED

C.A.M.C. Men Receive Military Medals For Bravery in Collecting the Wounded at Lens

MAJOR NELSON'S FEAT

(By Stewart Lyons, Special Correspondent of the Canadian Press in France.)

CANADIAN ARMY HEADQUARTERS Sept. 8.— Acting Major Blair Nelson, while in command of a machine gun company during the recent attack south-west of Lens, showed such resourcefulness and initiative powers that he has been awarded the Military Cross. His machine gun positions were subjected to an intense barrage early in the action, which killed one of his officers and put two guns out of action. He at once took charge of all three sections, moved the guns forward out of the barrage and re-opened fire with excellent results. He also had the damaged guns repaired temporarily and put them into line to repel counter attacks. His resourcefulness, aggressiveness and cool courage were an inspiration to all ranks.

For special meritorious service under fire on August 16th and 17th while collecting wounded, Military Medals have been awarded the following members of the Canadian Army Medical Corps: Corporal Leslie Owen Brown, Lance Corporal Garden Adams and Privates William Moore, Charles Edward Glover, William Frederick Whitmore, Richard Stanley Bassett and James Freeman McLellan.

A brigade of veteran Ontario troops gave a big tattoo last night similar to that put on at the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto.

DISFRANCHISING WAR WORKERS.

The clinching argument in extending the provincial vote to the majority of the women of Canada, was the splendid work the women of Canada, of all classes, had done, and were doing, in helping win the war. But by the proposed franchise bill by the Borden government, to be used in a war time election, the majority of the women of Canada are refused the franchise which a grateful nation has granted the women of Britain in recognition of their magnificent work in war.

By the proposed franchise bill the vote has been given the wives, mothers and sisters of Canadian soldiers, or soldiers from Canada on service overseas. To this there is no objection, and much to commend it; but to refuse the franchise to the majority of the women of Canada, who have equally well earned it by their splendid service, is manifestly unjust and ungrateful.

With full recognition of the sacrifice made by women who have sent their fathers or sons or brothers to the war, it is doubtful if they have done as much to support the soldier in the field, to comfort him in camp or hospital, as the mass of women by whose very work and personal sacrifice, the female relatives of soldiers have enjoyed a comfort, ease of living and, in some cases, luxury, they never knew before, but which nevertheless, was richly due them. Give the female relatives of soldiers the votes by all means; but do not insult in the form of scorn of the intelligence, the patriotism, the self-sacrifice, the patient and noble war service the vast majority of Canadian women.

The Borden government is a rich man's government. It was put in power by the millionaires, and government is largely conducted at the popular expense, in the interests of the moneyed classes.

A HINT TO INDUSTRIAL WORKMEN.

One of the most striking things in connection with the war is the immense improvement in surgery, surgical methods, and the successful treatment of wounds. It is a fact that a far larger proportion of wounded men are cured and sent back to the trenches than in any previous war. Skill in surgery is not the only cause of this improvement, but, what is more important, successful provision against infection.

Infection is the starting point of what the surgeons call septicaemia, and ordinary mortals, blood poisoning, which often ends fatally. In the August number of the Labour Gazette, a chapter is devoted to diseases incidental to industrial operations. A paragraph is devoted to infection in industrial accidents. The Danger from infection is forcibly shown—one out of every ten industrial accidents becoming subject to infection. The report of the Ohio Industrial Commission for 1915 showed that out of 73,595 industrial accidents, 7,073 became infected. In these cases of infection, 39 had fatal results, 161 resulted in permanent disabilities, and the remainder in prolonged and partial disabilities. To show the importance of the greatest care to avoid infection, it is stated that of the 39 fatal results from infection, 30 were in connection with very trivial injuries, such as small cuts, scratches and abrasions. Of 1,843 cases of permanent or partial disability from industrial accidents, 161 cases, or nearly ten per cent., were the result of infection.

Considering that, in the vast majority of cases, good health and sound limbs are the industrial workers' only capital, the importance of avoiding infection is great; and, considering that, according to statistics, so large a proportion of trivial injuries, through infection, result fatally, it is incumbent upon industrial workmen to exercise the greatest care. It is worth while, therefore, for the benefit of our own industrial workmen, to reproduce the advice given by the surgical experts of the Ohio Commission for avoidance of the danger of infection:

"Don't neglect small cuts, scratches and punctures. . . Don't neglect eye injuries. Even slight injuries to the eye may result in loss of vision. . . . Infetion may develop from the use of tobacco or cobwebs to stop bleeding, the use of a pin or a dirty penknife to remove splinters, the use of a dirty toothpick, dirty handkerchief, or dirty fingers of a fellow employee in attempting to remove a small particle from the eye. Wait, and have it removed by a doctor or a nuse. Give immediate aseptic dressing to the smallest wound because neglect may lead to serious consequences."

An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

THE HEATHEN TEACH US.

The "conscientious objector" breaks out in a new spot. The East Indian Government has issued a new war loan; for, in addition to the splendid help India has given in men and munitions, she is doing her bit in the way of helping with money. The new war loan has been largely subscribed, and a miracle has developed, and that is that many of the applicants for loans have religious—"conscientious"—objections to receiving interest. They are perfectly willing to lend their money to the government to help win the war, but they refuse to accept interest for it. They are so firm in their objection that they will not be satisfied by the assurance that if they do not want interest they can decline to take it when it falls due. They want it to be specified in their contract—"nominated in the bond"—that the amount of their loan does not carry interest. Consequently the government strains a point, and has prepared special certificates, embodying the condition that no interest is to be paid on the money.

Now, India is held to be a heathen country, a favourite hunting ground for the Christian missionary; and we should not naturally expect to find heathens give an example of sacrifice and an unwillingness to make gain out of the agony of war that shames the Christian profiteers of Christian Canada. In our churches to-morrow, among the hundreds of thousands of worshippers—professors of the glorious cult founded upon sacrifice, will there be found one who is willing to show the spirit of abnegation exhibited by some conscientious objectors of "heathen" India. What would be the outcome of a loan sought in Canada or any other Christian country, if a good round interest rate were not assured? We do not expect that such a loan would be offered. A fair rate of interest is admissable, on both economic and moral grounds.

The people are asked to sacrifice time and means, and millions have done so. And millions of Canadians have not done either; for the spirit of war sacrifice and war service is not universal. There are many—far too many—who refuse to sacrifice one iota—to sacrifice any pleasure or any luxury they can obtain. We have social enjoyments in play, as if the agony of war was not. We have feverish pursuit of pleasure. We have virtual dancing on the graves of those who have made the great sacrifice.

We do not all seem to be seized of a sense of the tremendous reality and tragedy of this war. Some of think that because the actual fighting and wasting of the war is across a thousand leagues of sea, we are not directly concerned. But we are as really threatened as if an invading army were at our gates. We have in this country at the present time, in one of our large cities, evidences of the employment of one of the weapons favoured by Germany—intrigue and incitation to outrage—in effect we are actually fighting Germany on Canadian soil.

It is the duty and to the interest of all to take part in combatting the common peril. We must not expect the soldiers to do it all. We must support them by sending new forces, and by maintaining an adequate supply of food and hospital necessities, and strengthening centres. All can not fight with arms; but all can fight by sacrifice of time and means to back the soldiers, who are showing the way by the exercise of indomitable courage and the sacrifice of limb and life.

When the Chinese troops get to the front, the Hun wil be confronted with the sign—"Mangling done here."

The Borden Government's Disfranchising Measure

The War-time Election Bill is a party measure. The attack on the political rights of a large group of foreign-born Canadians is tempered by their exemption from combatant service, but the principle of the Bill is wrong. It is inconsistent with national honour and British traditions. When men of alien birth were given their naturalization papers they were also given the full privileges of Canadian citizenship. It was a contract to which the good faith of the country was pledged. The Bill will cancel the chief article of the contract, the franchise, without proof that the voter has forfeited it by conduct unbecoming a patriotic Canadian. The presumption of innocence until guilt be proved, which underlies the common law, is reversed. It is true that the disability applies only to men who have been naturalized within the past fifteen years, but the country offered them the franchise three years after their arrival, in order to hasten the process of Canadianizing them. It is now proposed to deprive them of the badge of citizenship.

The Bill is aimed at the large element in the West of German and Austrian birth. These men came to Canada to escape the conditions of life in their native lands, and they came upon the invitation of the Canadian people, whose agents scoured Europe for immigrants to till the empty prairies. They have added immeasurably to the wealth of the country. During the war they have given no trouble as a class; one hears no echo among them of the seditious propaganda of Teutons across the line. Many are Ukrainians—the Galician branch of the family—whose sympathies, formerly with Austria, though never troublesomely so, have turned to Russia since the Revolution, which has given a new hope and vision to their race in Europe. Disfranchisement will be only for the period of the war, but the memory of it will survive for a generation, and will tend to undo the great work of assimilation carried on by the schools, the churches, and, not least, by the ballot, the pledge of their civil and political equality. The Mill is therefore not good national policy. It is more German than Canadian or British in its character.

The refusal of the vote to all the women of Canada, in view of the fact that the majority of them enjoy the Provincial franchise, and have exercised it in the West, is another blemish on the Bill. The Solicitor-General promises them the ballot after the war. Surely the women of Canada have earned it by their magnificently patriotic spirit and their war work. British women have been given it by a grateful nation. Why are their Canadian sisters slighted? The exception in favour of the women relatives of the soldiers will be welcomed, but there should be no restrictions upon one sex that do not apply to the other. It is to be hoped that the Government will be persuaded to widen the Bill in this respect.—The Globe.

"Wear-Ever" Kettles

Just in Time For the Canning and Preserving Season—Demonstration at Campbell & Best's

What is likely to be of special interest to housekeepers just now—while the home canning and preserving season is on in the kitchen—is the demonstration next week of "Wear-Ever" Aluminum Kettles, at Campbell & Best's, 134 Hunter St. Special attention is therefore directed to the prominent announcement given of this event which appears on page 16 of this paper.

The opportunity that will be presented all next week to possess one of these kettles at the special demonstration price will doubtless bring many purchasers to Campbell & Best's store. An experienced lady demonstrator, Mrs. Chapin, has been engaged to be present, who will give specific information and advice to the ladies on the preserving question, and its relation to the "Ever-Wear" Kettle.

CONDITION OF CANADA'S FIELD CROPS AS SHOWN BY SPECIAL REPORTS

OTTAWA, September 4, 1917.— The Census and Statistics Office issued today the following special report on the condition of field crops throughout Canada, as compiled from telegrams despatched at the end of August.

Atlantic Provinces.—In Prince Edward Island the hay crop was heavier than anticipated. Pests have reduced wheat 20 p.c. below average. Other grains are full crop. Potatoes except for a few blighted areas, should yield above average. Full crop of roots, vegetables and corn. In Nova Scotia all crops made excellent growth. Labour scarce, haying slow but hay being stored in good condition. Flax ripening nicely, hemp fair growth, considerable rust. In New Brunswick August weather too wet and warm for best crop yields. Wheat and oats below average; potatoes going down with late blight reducing crop prospects to about 60 p.c. of average yields. Roots promise well. Very heavy hay crops. Pastures good.

Quebec.—Rimouski: Abundant yield of hay; grain and potatoes have fine appearance; plums good, apples small and a month late. Lennoxville: Considerable hay not cut and much grain ripe but in bad shape through excessive rain fall. Cap Rouge: Hay crop heaviest in years but not yet all in and quality not good owing to frequent rains. All grain much below normal from same cause. Silage corn and potatoes poor; apples only half a crop.

Ontario.—Ottawa: Harvesting is almost completed, and grain crops are giving a very fair yield; potatoes, roots and corn are doing well; pastures are short. Peterborough: Wheat, barley and oats yielding high; grain extra good sample; mangolds, turnips and potatoes doing well; corn large acreage and heavy crop; pastures good; apple crop light. Oshawa: Yield of wheat and oats above average. Lodged oats decrease crop and double labour otherwise a record crop. Barley average crop; root crops good, corn fair. Hyde Park: Wheat yielding 25 bushels per acre; oats in stock, grain light; barley grain small, corn late and may not mature; potatoes and roots good. Large acreage of fall wheat will be sown if possible. Petrolea: Ideal harvest weather, all grain crops harvested except 10 p.c. of oats. Best season for years. Increased acreage being sown to fall wheat.

Manitoba— Brandon: Dry weather has combined throughout August. Cutting completed, threshing begun. Yield better than was feared, and quality excellent. Franklin: Conditions much improved during month. Wheat will yield very fair, good sample. Oats and barley a little light. No damage by frost. Harrowby: Wheat harvest well along, 15 bushels per acre. Oats and barley 40 p.c. cut for feed, will thresh 25 bushels, potatoes 30 p.c. of average.

Saskatchewan. — Rosthern: Most wheat will grade 1 and 2. Yield 20 to 30 bushels. Scott: Wheat will probably average 16 bushels, barley 30, oats 30 to 45. Sufficient labourers for immediate requirements at $4 per day. More help wanted for threshing.

Alberta.—The Alberta Department of Agriculture reports that crops have greatly improved on account of general rains, frequent showers and favourable weather conditions. It is now estimated that the yields will be a good average, if not a little better, although the previous dry weather permanently reduced average over a considerable area. With the exception of a number of destructive hailstorms there has been no damage to crops by frost or otherwise. Harvest operations are now general, in the lighter districts 50 to 75 p.c. of grain has been cut. Threshing will be general latter part of netx week. No frost yet; all cereals will grade higher than usual; roots and live stock in excellent condition. Lethbridge: Harvest well advanced in southern Alberta. Yields generally are somewhat lighter than anticipated. Oats and barley rather poor. Serious hailstorms at Hyde Park. No frost recorded. Lacombe: Harvesting in central Alberta further advanced than for any pervious season for ten years. Yield of grain below average, but superior in quality.

British Columbia.— Agassiz August dry and hot. Grain medium crop, no damage from rain in stock; root crops and pastures badly need moisture. Summerland: Apples 10 p.c. more than last year and of best quality. Grain not well filled. Serious water shortage. Invermere Good second cuts on alfalfa and clover under irrigation; roots and corn have made good growth. Sidney: All grain harvested in excellent weather. Yield not heavy. Forage crops, roots and potatoes will be light; apples and other orchard fruit below average, pastures very short and rain much needed.

Millions of people die every year from Consumption. Millions could have been saved if only common sense prevention had been used in the first stage—Asthma, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Pneumonia, Weak Lungs, Catarrh, Cough, Colds and Diseases of the Respiratory Organs—all lead up to Consumption — Tuberculosis. Dr. Strandgard's T.B. Medicine is a most successful treatment for above-mentioned Diseases. Awarded Gold Medal for Medicines at the three International Exhibitions — London, 1910; Paris, 1911; Brussels, 1909; and in Rotterdam, 1913. Write for booklet. Correspondence invited.

ed the convention in Toronto in July. She also spoke of the saving which could be made in small ways in the home, taking for instance the tomato, which leaves the farm, is taken to the canning factory and brought back and sold for 18c. a can whereas the same process could be accomplished in the home at a cost of 4c.

Mrs. A. Stevenson.

Mrs. Stevenson impressed the real importance of food conservation by extracts. Lord Rhondda's message to Mr. Hanna, in which he said he realized the difficulty of finding a supply of labour to harvest the great crops which testify Canada's patriotism and determination to wi nthe war. Every effort must be made to keep our armies suitably fed. 400,000,000 bushels of wheat must be produced by us. The normal crop is 300,000,000. The deficit of 100,000,000 must be made up by economy. Britain and France are dependent on one half the usual tonnage. The time has come when the allied armies are dependent upon the States and Canada against defeat. Waste means defeat, and the shortage of food has brought the decision of the world's war into the kitchen.

Address by Rev. R. J. Patterson.

The campaign will be forwarded on Tuesday night when Rev. Mr. R. J. Patterson will give an address to educate those who will distribute pledge cards into the homes as to the meaning of the campaign.

Resolution Passed.

The following resolution, moved by Mrs. Kendry and seconded by Mrs. Bush was passed:

Resolved, that this meeting, composed of presidents and representatives of all Women's Societies in the city, co-operate with the work of the Food Controller through the organization of Resources committee and its Women's Auxiliary.

ANOTHER BELATED ... RUSH IS EXPECTED AT SARNIA

SARNIA, Sept. 7.—Women of this city who shop in Port Huron or other Michigan cities and return to Canada without declaring their purchases are wearing an apprehensive and anxious look, following the arrival of Mrs. Orilvie, special customs inspector, in this city. On the occasion of a previous visit of a female inspector to this city citizens who had at some time or other made purchases in Port Huron were surprised to receive notices from the customs department requesting them to forward the amount of duty payable on the goods brought clandestinely into the country to the customs department. Some who failed to comply with this request were visited by the inspector and the duty collected.

Apparently the officials were in possession of exact data on the quantity of ... purchased the amount paid for same, and the date on which the purchase was made, which started rumours of spies and informers. With the return of the female inspector to this port these stories are being revived. Women returning to this city from Port Huron are requested at certain periods of the day to step into the ... office and submit to search. ... feeling at this action runs high among the female section of the population. It is currently reported, although not authentically, that on this occasion the lady inspector is in possession of more information and data on wearables purchased in Port Huron by local women, and it is hinted that they will be visited and requested to "come across with the duty."

Do You Want To Make Money

There is not a Boy in the City but is anxious to make all the money he can after school, so as it will be his own to do with as he likes.

SELLING "THE EXAMINER"

Newspaper is one of the easiest and most popular ways by which a schoolboy can make a good deal of money

First Prize $25

Second Prize $20

Third Prize $15

Fourth Prize $10

Fifth Prize $5

6th Prize $4

7th Prize $3

8th Prize $2

9th Prize $1

THE EVENING EXAMINER is sold to the NEWSBOY AT ONE CENT a copy. He sells it for TWO CENTS. In this way he doubles his money. By getting regular customers he delivers it to them at ten cents a week, and makes FOUR CENTS A WEEK ON EACH CUSTOMER. There are quite a number of newsboys delivering THE EXAMINER to customers who make as high as $2.50 A WEEK, and all done after school, in addition to the profit that is made by selling the papers. The Examiner is giving NINETY-FIVE DOLLARS IN CASH PRIZES to the boys who secure the most customers for themselves between MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10TH AND NOVEMBER 1ST NEXT, JUST NINE WEEKS. It does not make any difference whether you have one customer or fifty customers on Monday next, it is the boys who get the greatest number of new customers that win the prizes. Supposing you did not have any customers when you started, and at the end of the contest you had fifteen; another boy had fifty when the contest started, and at the end he had sixty-four, this boy would have only got fourteen new customers. And the first boy would win the prize because he had fifteen new customers to take The Examiner while the other boy had only fourteen. CASH PRIZES will be given to the boys who secure the GREATEST NUMBER OF NEW CUSTOMERS FOR THEMSELVES AS FOLLOWS:

BOYS! Make up YOUR MINDS to Enter the Contest on MONDAY Next

It is easy to sell THE EXAMINER. It is the legitimate business of the newsboy to sell papers, and if you are polite in your canvassing for new customers all your friends and even strangers will be glad to help you.

It is fine experience for any boy or girl, and as there are quite a few girls who are now distributing THE EXAMINER they are ELIGIBLE TO ENTER THE CONTEST.

Mothers and fathers talk this matter over with your boys and girls. It is a good business training. There are hundreds of young men successful in business in the City and elsewhere who have at some time in their earlier days been Examiner newsboys.

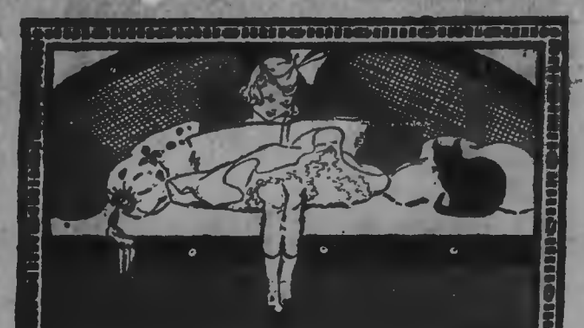
SELL ONLY THE EXAMINER. Get your friends to try it for a few weeks and you will find they will be regular customers, and remember a gain of a few new customers each week may win you the $25.00 PRIZE. If there is anything you DO NOT UNDERSTAND drop into THE EXAMINER OFFICE this week and it will be explained to you.

The only condition is that Each Boy or Girl must buy their own Papers and no Prizes will be awarded to a boy who buys another boys papers and put them in as his own.

IN ADDITION THERE WILL BE A

WEEKLY CASH PRIZE OF $1.00

which will be paid EVERY MONDAY to the NEWSBOY or GIRL who makes the BIGGEST GAIN DURING EACH WEEK. A boy can be earning all the time, he has the profit on his customers, he may win the Weekly Prize of a $1.00 and he also has the opportunity of winning One of the Big Cash Prizes, the largest of which is $25.00.



IF right out of the book, a good kind Fairy Godmother should pop and take you touring on her aeroplane, looking down into home after home every morning, you would see thousands of boys and girls, and their elders too, enjoying Dominion Toasted Corn Flakes.

Completion Of Motor Cruiser By H. B. Rye Suggests Popularity Of This Craft On Trent Waterway

Mr. D. W. Dumble recently expressed his impatience with the attitude of apathy and indifference Peterborough assumes towards the opportunities he predicts will follow the opening of the Trent Canal. Therein he defies the human trait that sniffs at local prophets, and perhaps he re-echoes the rich promises that politicians in his most impressionable years used to dangle before the ballots of a simple and guileless generation. The present Government lives and acts solely to Win-the-War," according to Mr. Meighen and other patriots whom the white light that beats upon the throne reveals. Hence while the people's money is being jealously guarded to meet the huge daily war cost, the petition to hasten the completion of the Canal receives scant consideration, at least while the Government is determined to pay its friends par for a ramshackle railway, provide for unneeded, pre-election wharves in New Brunswick and string telephone lines in western wastes. The early prospects of the Canal seem to have vanished before its imminent reality, and while it is treated as a poor relation at Ottawa, Mr. Dumble believes it has a fortune stored away somewhere. Hence he encourages expectancy, advises the friendly ingratiating approach and general attentiveness in these lean, weary days. He predicts that in the ordinary course of Parliamentary handouts the Canal will come into its own, and the politicians of an earlier day will be vindicated as the major prophets of the Trent Canal. Mr. Dumble's faith in the ultimate utility of the Canal has become almost an obsession. Some of the citizens who heard his latest presentment smiled, rather broadly too, at his animated picture of fleets of barges passing through Peterborough, while a cold and unimaginative Government stands unmoved and unresponsive, controlled by railway interests that fear the waterway.

And Mr. Dumble following the prophets as did John the Baptist, exhorts this city to prepare for the navigation of to-morrow. A true zealot, he pays no heed to scoffers who if their faith be unsteady still cling to hope. His timely reminder may induce action by those citizens who seek to serve a greater Peterborough, and, while the commercial means of using the Canal are being investigated, another aspect of the navigation in prospect is presented here at home.

Mr. Harold B. Rye is building at the Otonabee Boat House a cruiser designed by W. H. Hand of New Bedford, Mass. It is 32 feet long with a beam of 8 feet 8 inches, and when completed in a short time will be used by the engineering department of the Trent Canal. It has fore and aft cabins 7 ft. 6 in. in length and a bridge deck 9 feet long. The galley is under the fore deck, and the gasoline engine will be placed under the bridge deck from which the vessel will be guided by automobile control. Refrigerator, lavatory, shelving and other equipment are included in the plans. The frame is of solid white oak and the planking of cypress. Brass fittings will eventually be provided. They will include the railing bordering the walk around the trunk cabines fore and aft. When completed the cruiser will be used by the Canal staff to transport them to various sections requiring engineering attention. The hull is the Hand celebrated "V" shape and is essentially a speed design in vessels of that length. Given adequate power its hydroplane slant would soon be manifested. For the present it will have a 10 h.p. engine that will hold it to seven or eight miles an hour.

This cruiser with its comfortable and commodious accommodation for six or seven persons may be the forerunner of a fleet of pleasure craft which, it is believed, will gradually appear in the Trent waters. The day may not be far distant when the standard of wealth in this district will be the motor cruiser, succeeding the "coach and four," touring car or the number of bath rooms at home.

In and around New York and other Atlantic ports these vessels range from the miniature types, the man of ordinary means enjoys to the long, racy ocean-going craft that only the princes of earth and Wall Street can afford. It has been an easy matter to develop the latter types when builders were given carte blanche orders, but it is only recently that the demands of the little fellow at the bottom of the list have been given a hearing. Magazines devoted to motor-boating have stimulated interest and with the restoration of peace the cruiser type should rapidly multiply.

The cruiser is practically a house-boat; it has most of the advantages of a cottage with the most salient feature, the fact that it is a boat. With it you can drop anchor as near home as you wish with the shore as a back or front yard, or you can cast off for New York on a holiday trip. With the completion of the Canal these inland waters should attain a popularity we hesitate to imagine to-day. All the water front of the Great Lakes, the Erie Canal, the lower St. Lawrence, and the Canal from the St. Lawrence to the Albany River and New York. This may be amplifying too generously the promises of the prophetic politicians, but Reeve Rye is completing a concrete sample of the cruiser class, and Mr. Dumble's sanguine of the completion of the entire Canal before he is called home.

Peterborough citizens may some day spend their summers on such craft as this, and those who remain in the city may enjoy them on the river these with week-end trips reaching to Hastings. The picture may seem overdrawn, somewhat Futuristic perhaps, but the first of this type of boat to be launched in this district is almost ready for the rollers.

Legion Of Honour For Capt. Bishop

Canadian Press Despatch:

MONTREAL, Sept. 8.—Captain W. Bishop, the Owen Sound aviator, who has already won the Victoria Cross, Distinguished Service Order and Military Cross in his marvellous exploits in aerial fighting, will likely be given the Legion of Honour by the French government according to a letter received to-day from another officer. He says Bishop is now on leave of absence in England after a marvellous escape, when his machine crashed to the ground aflame from an altitude of four thousand feet. PETERBOROUGH WILL HAVE WELL EQUIPPED FACTORY

"Shoe and Leather Journal" Comments on Peterboro's Latest Industrial Enterprise—Men's and Boys' Staples Will Be Made Under Trade Mark Name

The ratepayers of Peterborough will vote upon a by-law on September 6th, to continue the present assessment of $23,790, for the term of ten years, on the manufacturing plant and property of B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co., Limited, on condition of the firm starting a shoe factory.

There is not the slightest doubt but that the by-law will carry by a large majority, as the Ackerman plant has, for the past half century, been one of the most progressive and enterprising industries in the Electric City.

Another evidence of the go-ahead character of the firm is their intention to branch out into the making of staple footwear for men, and the personnel of those behind the project is such as to insure its success and expansion.

It was away back in 1871 that B. F. Ackerman started to make harness in an unpretentious shop in Port Perry. Trade grew as the years passed by, and in 1892, the facilities at Port Perry became too small for the developing harness business, and it was necessary to move to a larger centre, possessing better shipping facilities and having competitive railway lines. Peterborough was selected as an eligible location, and the wisdom of the choice is evidenced by the fact, that within seven years, after moving to that city, the present large factory on George street was built by the firm.

WELL APPOINTED, SPACIOUS PREMISES.

The building is 90 feet frontage and has a depth of 172 feet, consisting of three storeys and a basement. In 1915, the firm of B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co., became incorporated under the title of B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co., Limited, with a capital stock of $500,000. B. F. Ackerman is president, E. W. Borbridge, vice-president; W. C. Ackerman, secretary-treasurer, and Geo. Robertson, director and accountant. The firm make light and heavy harness, horse collars, horse blankets and other allied lines, and have for years maintained a large five-storey warehouse in Regina, which is used for distributing purposes throughout the Prairie Provinces. The building is 50 by 110 feet, and one of the most imposing structures in the capital city of Saskatchewan. The possession of such facilities in the West, ensures the shipping of all goods in car load lots, and the most expeditious transportation arrangements. About 100 hands are employed by the company in Peterborough, and this number will be materially increased, as soon as the new shoe department is under way. The second and part of the third floors of the commodious building will at present be used for shoemaking purposes. Frank W. McKeen, who has been appointed superintendent for the firm, and is a thoroughly practical and progressive shoemaker, states that the space, ventilation and lighting facilities meet every desired requirement.

The output will be about 300 pairs per day, in men's, boy's and youths' medium and high grade staples, but just how the output will be marketed, has not yet been decided. The firm will turn out a trademark shoe, and will keep their footwear products up to the same high standard of excellence, quality and merit which has characterized their Horse-Head brand of harness for the past forty-six years.

The heads of the new shoe factory are practically leather men, who have grasped all details of the leather business. B. F. Ackerman, has been a public spirited resident of Peterborough for the last quarter of a century, and served for many years on the Board of Education, and at the same time took a deep interest in the Board of Trade and other public bodies. E. W. Borbridge, vice-president and sales manager, has had a long acquaintance with the leather game, having been associated with the Hugh Carson Co., Limited, Ottawa, for many years, while the name of Borbridge's is synonymous with leather throughout the whole Ottawa Valley. W. C. Ackerman has been connected with his father's business all his life and has done much to ensure its up-build and success. Lieut.-Col. Charles Ackerman is another son, who returned home some time ago after doing service at the front, where he sustained several wounds in upholding the prestige and honour of the cause which he has so dearly at heart.

Mr. Ackerman's youngest son, Lt. Arthur Ross Ackerman, who has been in continuous service overseas since 1914, was mortally wounded September 23rd, 1916, at Courcelette and died in London Hospital, October 11th, and was interred at Peterborough. Lieut. Ackerman had won the Military Cross for bravery on the field.

B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co., Limited, sell their products all over Canada and have a staff of seven travelling salesmen, who are thoroughly familiar with the trade. In branching out in the shoe manufacturing arena, many friends of the company feel they will meet with the same measure of success and achievement that they have in their other lines, which will be continued with the same energy and vigor.

Keep Children Well During Hot Weather

Cholera infantum, diarrhoea, dysentry and stomach troubles are rife at this time and often a precious little life is lost after only a few hours illness. The occasional use of the Tablets prevents stomach and bowel troubles, or if trouble comes suddenly—as it generally does—the Tablets will bring the baby safely through. HIS CROPS HAVE PAID IN SPITE OF STORMS

CALGARY, Sept. 7.—An Alberta farmer living south of Calgary insured his crop against hail early in the season. He was hailed out and collected 90 per cent of his policy. The crop started to come up afterwards and he again insured. He was hailed out the second time and collected another 90 per cent. This same crop has been threshed out and brought ten bushels to the acre, which sold for $2 a bushel on the Calgary market.

In selecting materials for the above purposes we have used the utmost care. Hence we do not hesitate to recommend tapestries and shadow cloths. The tapestries are double width and come in rich wood tones—they have a quiet elegance all their own.

It is abundantly stocked with numberless patterns and colours at various prices.

Some Advanced Designs in Over Draperies

Huge Shipment of Rugs of Every Description

Pile upon pile of new rugs were dumped off at our door during the past week. Some Brussels, some Axminster and some Wilton—but a great preponderance of the latter. A Little Appreciation Of Miss Dorothy Allan

Who in the Near Future is Leaving Peterborough

"How blessings brighten as they take their flight,"—thus sang the sombre thinker of Young's "Night Thoughts." These words come to our minds and hearts as we contemplate the removal from Peterborough of its favourite vocalist, and one of the most capable and distinguished soloists of the country, Miss Dorothy Allan. The prospective great loss to the musical forces of Peterborough gives a keener, but no new, sense of appreciation of her musical merits.

Miss Allan is leaving Peterborough at an early date and will not return till the end of the war; and one more opportunity will be given to hear her in the Collegiate Institute Hall, next Monday evening; it will be a repetition of the delights that have come to all the audiences that have so many times heard Dorothy Allan. The programme is a splendid one and reveals her at her best.

Miss Allan is a vocalist, whose departure will be a great loss to Peterborough, as it would be to any place in Canada, no matter how richly endowed with great singers. Her natural gifts of voice, musical temperament and pleasant personality have been improved upon by careful cultivation, experience in her art, and by contact with the public. Her voice is a magnificent one, combining strength and rich quality of tone. Its compass is so exceptional that one cannot err in describing it as a soprano or a mezzo-soprano, a circumstance that accounts for the wide range of her vocal repertory. Its quality, warmth and smoothness persist through all the registers. Without irreverence, Miss Allan's voice is fitly described by her name—Dorothy, the gift of God. Her study and training have not only developed its natural splendid quality, but a correctness of method, a facility of employment, and artistic effectiveness, that, combined with a warm musical temperament, an interpretative intuition, make her the excellent artist she is. Her charming presence and becoming modesty, complementary to her artistically effetive singing, assure her always an appreciative welcome. Wherever she has frequently been called to sing in different parts of the province, she has achieved striking success, and press comment on her work has been of the most warmly eulogistic kind.

Miss Allan's musical and vocal training have been altogether given by her father, Mr. John Allan, except a brief term of study with Maestro Giovanni Clerici, the teacher of Caruso.

Miss Allan will not only be missed for her singing in itself, but for the services she has given through it to patriotic work all through the war. These services have been plentifully and freely given in promotion of every sort of patriotic work.

Added to her other claims to appreciation, her charming social qualities contribute to a popularity and affectionate regard that send the best wishes of thousands with her into her new estate and her new home.

South End Boys Show Defiance Of "Verboten" Taint

In King Edward Park the small boy demonstrates his aversion, if not his hatred, for the Hun. Perhaps the evidence is not generally obvious but when indicated it must be striking and impressive. Early in the season, the city disposed about eighteen benches in shady and other advantageous places; one of them barely spanned the breadth of a huge elm, another all but excluded from view a maple sapling. They were pleasing to the eye and appealing to the imagination of the citizens, especially nearby residents who could view them from their verandahs on a warm summer night and comment upon the failure of the people to avail themselves of the cool open stretches of the park. It wasn't necessary to tack up warning signs, the counterpart of the German's restricting "Verboten" and its insistance upon orderliness, the boys apparently knew that this straining at preciseness was but a detail of the Kultur they had heard repeated with "Verboten" and other sinister terms they realized were German. Hence with gleeful defiance of the Teuton idea the small boys soon asserted their budding individualism and their intolerance of the restraint that is wrapped up in the German peril. Every bench was rearranged. None were left upright on all fours. Some of them were piled together and the general aspect was one of wanton abandon flouting the thought and essence of the idea of order. Occasionally the exuberant youngsters restored the original arrangement, but only to revive and renew their disdain. Night and morning and at mid-day the benches sprawled like helpless, intoxicated figures, a war time challenge hurled at "Verboten" and all its petty tyrannies. King Edward proved himself no friend to "Kultur," and the small boy perhaps felt that the park should show itself worthy of the name it bears. This sign of the south end youth's antagonism to everything German is of course reassuring. Incidentally the municipality's ulterior intention now discerned in the provision of the benches is disclosed as a splendid idea in the making of patriots, but the lesson might be more zestful if a policeman were sent around occasionally. There is no fun in an incorporal Kaiser and imaginary Verbotens. The last factor for complete success would be supplied—but this is asking too much—by some such encouragement as a sign thus inscribed: "Boys — every time you dump a bench when the cop's looking and get away with it, you get a nickel."

WRITE US—We want the Names of Peterboro People who may be in the Market for Pressed Brick

We urge everyone who is thinking of building, either in the Spring or earlier, to write us at once. We have a proposition to place before you that may materially affect your plans. It will certainly set you thinking if you want really good looking, permanent construction. The probabilities are that when you get to know all the facts you will decide to use

Interprovincial Pressed Brick

A Proposition That Will Interest You

Let us remind you first that coal is going up in price alarmingly. It takes coal to fire brick. That means the quicker you buy your brick the better the price.

So you must decide at once, and you can't decide in justice to yourself until you have examined carefully what we are going to propose to you, whether you are planning for a house, store or factory.

The Best Brick on the Market

Interprovincial Pressed Brick is made of extra heavy Shale, to ensure a hard, durable brick. It has particularly smooth surfaces and clean, sharp edges. The colors are absolutely natural, no chemical effects are used, so the colors CANNOT fad

Interprovincial is the best facing brick on the market to-day. It costs very little more money than facing with common brick, yet think of the difference in the finished appearance of your home, or other building! Samples free upon request.

PUBLIC OPINION

OUR HOMEMADE CAMOUFLAGE.

(Minneapolis Tribune.)

When the armies abroad hide a gun under green boughs, or paint a ship to look like playing waters, or cover a road with painted canvas to make it resemble an unbroken forest, or do anything of that kind to deceive the enemy, they call it camouflage.

We have our camouflage in this country too, and it is being used long in advance of the firing of American guns.

We have the man who paints his disloyalty with words tending to make it appeal like loyalty.

We have the drafted man—mighty few of him, thanks be—who eats soap or goes hungry to make his wellness look like illness.

We have the profiteer who hides his gluttony for gain behind a sonorous warning that government food control will undermine democracy.

We have the politician who pretends upon being alert to the saving of his country when in truth his first thought is to save his job or do something for his party at the expense of the opposing party

We have the man who pretends to believe that he who serves his country on farm or in factory serves it as bravely and well as he who carries a gun to the trenches.

We have the party which prates loudly of liberty and the rights of the people while in the act of adopting resolutions that gladden the heart of the Kaiseristas.

We have our men in high places wearing the livery of statesmanship, but clad beneath with the garb of mediocrity.

All in all, camouflage has quite a vogue over on this side of the ocean, but it is for the most part a thin veneer that peels off under the light of pitiless publicity.

THE FRENCH POILU.

The French poilu, sketcher a correspondent, is compounded of equal parts of weariness, good humor, and dirt. His kodt is always buttoned wrong and his fingernails are always torn around their grimy edges. He wears a moustache and the Croix de Guerre; there is no exception to this rule. He lives on bad chocolate, worse bread, and still worse wine. He has two wants: A letter from home and a Pickelhaube. He is always torn between two conflicting sentiments: A bas les Boches, and A bas la guerre. He is war's wonder as well as war's lesson.

FREQUENT HEADACHES

People with thin blood are much more subject to headaches than full-blooded persons and the form of anaemia that afflicts growing girls is almost always accompanied by headaches together with disturbance of the digestive organs.

Whenever you have constant or recurring headaches and pallor of the face, they show that the blood is thin and your efforts should be directed toward building up your blood. A fair treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will do this effectively, and the rich, red blood made by these pills will remove the headache.

More disturbances to the health are caused by their blood than most people have any idea of. When your blood is impoverished, the nerves suffer from lack of nourishment and you may be troubled with insomnia, neuritis, neuralgia or sciatica. Muscles subject to strain are under-nourished and you may have muscular rheumatism or lumbago. If your blood is thin and you begin to show symptoms of any of these disorders, try building up the blood with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and as the blood is restored go its normal condition every symptom of the trouble will disappear. There are more people who owe their present state of good health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills than to any other medicine, and most of them do not hesitate to say so.

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Sunday Sermon For Those Who Do Not Go To Church

(By JAS. SUTHERLAND)

Judges vii., chap. 8th. Gideon's battle cry—"The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." Gideon rose up early now that he is sure God is with him; he is impatient of delay. He pitched near a well, that his army might not be distressed for want of water, and gained the higher ground. Faith in God's promises must not slacken but rather quicken our endeavours. God provides that the praise of the intended victory may be reserved wholly to Himself by appointing three hundred men only to be employed in this service. The army consisted of thirty-two thousand men, a small army in comparison with the midianites. Gideon thought his army too small, but God says that there are too many. God would hereby show that the battle to be fought and won is not to be by a large army, nor by might nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts. The Lord shall fight for you and ye shall hold your peace. He would hereby exclude boasting. That is the reason given by Him Who knows the pride that is in men's hearts, lest Israel vaunt themselves against Me. Justly were they denied the honour of the service who would not give God the honour of the success. Activity and prudence very properly accompany dependence upon God for assistance in all our lawful undertakings. The Lord, being acquainted with the secrets of every heart, varies His conduct with a wise regard to a multitude of circumstances which cannot be perceived by any others. When He sees that men are inclined to overlook Him and, through unbelief, to shrink from perilous services, or that through pride they would vaunt themselves against Him, He will set them aside and do His work by other instruments. Many profess themselves followers of Christ, helpers to His servants, and prepared to fight under His banner, while persecution and tribulation are at a distance; but without true faith and a good conscience the heart will fail in the immediate prospect of danger. Some excuse will be found for deserting the cause of Christ and escaping the Cross. But though a religious body may thus be weakened in numbers, they will gain in purity and strength and may expect an increased blessing from the Lord. God took two ways to lessen their numbers. First, He ordered all who were timerous and faint-hearted to return to their homes. There was a law for such a proclamation as this—Deut. xx., 8. Secondly, God ordered the dismissal of all that remained except three hundred men, which He caused to be done by a sign. Gideon is ordered to bring his soldiers to a watering place, probably the well of Hared, or the stream that ran from it. He or some one appointed by him were to observe how they drank. We may suppose that they were all thirsty and were inclined to drink. The most part kneeled down on their knees to drink, and put their mouths to the water so that they might get their full draught, but three hundred hastily took up water in their hands. By this further distinction it was provided that none should be made use of, but men that thought it long until they were engaged with the enemy, preferring the service of God and their country. Such as these God wishes to employ: those who are zealous and well affected to His cause. Thus strangely was Gideon's army recruited as one would think in so great an action it needed to be. Then instead of making them more serviceable by their equipment they are made less so. Every soldier took his own provisions with them, which was a trial of their faith whether they could trust God; when they had no more provisions with them than they could carry. The three hundred men were furnished with trumpets, instead of weapons of war, as if they had been going rather for their amusement than to battle. Gideon's army being thus diminished, God furnished him with a good foundation to build his faith upon; arise, get thee down to this host with this handful of men. I have delivered it into thine hand—it is all thine own. God knows the infirmities of His people, and what great encouragement they may sometimes take from a small matter, knowing what would occur to Gideon in that very part of the camp to which he would go down. He orders him to go down and hearken to what they said that he might the more firmly believe what God had said. God prepared a dream by one of the Midianites and the interpretation in the mouth of another, and brought Gideon to hear both; made his enemies prophets of his victory. Even the enemies of God may have visions and power to construe them aright, for exemaple, Baaelim; wicked men are often forewarned of their own destruction. The dream seemed to be of little significance, but the interpretation evidently proved the whole to be from the Lord, and discovered that the name of Gideon had filled the Midianites with terror. Gideon therefore took this as a sure pledge of success. Without delay, he worshipped and praised God, and returned with confidence to his three hundred men, who were the host of the Lord, by Whom he intended to deliver Israel. The three hundred men divided into three companies, and encompassed the whole camp of the Midianites. Concealing their lamps in their pitchers, they passed unobserved to their stations. Then in the dead of the night, when most of the enemy were fast asleep, they occasioned a great alarm by all at once breaking their pitchers, one against another, with as much noise as they could, blowing the trumpets and shouting. The sword of the Lord and of Gideon.

The enemy in their confusion concluded themselves surprised by a large army, and in the dark became apprehensive of each other, when some, by mistake, had been slain, the terror became more general till everyone was engaged in battle with his fellow. The obedience of faith alone could have induced so defenceless a company to venture on such an expedient. The Midianites fled in every direction. Two of the chief commanders of the host of Midian were captured and slain — Oreb and Zeeb, princes of Midian. Gideon pursued his enemies and bravely followed up his blow. His resolution was exemplary: he effected his purpose under the greatest disadvantages and discouragements that could be. He took none with him but his three hundred men, who now had laid aside their trumpets and torches and had taken their swords and spears. God had said by these three hundred men will I save you. Confiding in that promise Gideon kept to them; only he expected more from his three hundred men, supported by the promise of God, than from many thousands, supported by their own valour. They were faint, yet pursuing, much fatigued with what they had done, yet eager to do more against their enemies, and to gain a complete victory. The men of Israel gathered themselves together out of all the coasts and joined in the pursuit, in response to Gideon's call to head off the fleeing army. They captured the two princes and brought their heads to Gideon. Gideon and his men passed over Jordan, faint and weary, and he said to the men of Succoth: Give I pray you loaves of bread unto the people that follow me, for they be faint, and I am pursuing after Zeba and Zalmunna, kings of Midian, but they answered with contempt and insult. Gideon said when these kings were captured he would, on his return, scourge them with briars and thorns as a punishment for their wickedness, which he did on his triumphant return. When men make their pride, the ruin of it is justly made their shame. Yours sincerely,

James Sutherland.

AUTOINTOXICATION OR SELF-POISONING

The Dangerous Condition Which Produces Many Well Known Diseases.

HOW TO GUARD AGAINST THIS TROUBLE

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" — The Wonderful Fruit Medicine — will Protect You

Autointoxication means self-poisoning, caused by continuous or partial constipation, or insufficient action of the bowels.

Instead of the refuse matter passing daily from the body, it is absorbed by the blood. As a result, the Kidneys and Skin are overworked, in their efforts to rid the blood of this poisoning.

Poisoning of the blood in this way often causes Indigestion, Loss of Appetite and Disturbed Stomach. It may produce Headaches and Sleeplessness. It may irritate the Kidneys and bring on Pain in the Back, Rheumatism, Gout, and Rheumatic Pains. It is the chief cause of Eczema — and keeps the whole system unhealthy by the constant absorption into the blood of this refuse matter.

"Fruit-a-tives" will always cure Autointoxication or self-poisoning — as "Fruit-a-tives" acts gently on bowels, kidneys and skin, strengthens the bowels and tones up the nervous system.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Lindsay Council Objects To New Billiard License

Members of Lindsay Town Council Are Opposed to Granting Licenses to Outsiders

At the regular meeting of the Lindsay Town Council Mr. L. V. O'Connor appeared on behalf of John Andros of the Kent street shoe shine and shooting gallery, saying that there had been a lot of talk lately about some Peterborough speculators being behind John Andros, who was at present having his premises enlarged with the idea of installing some billiard tables. Two years ago Mr. O'Connor had approached the council for a license for Mr. Andros, and the matter was deferred; then the next year he renewed his application, and at last it was granted last March or April. As to the statement re Peterborough speculators, I know something about the deal that is in progress. I hold a lease here that should be enlightening. It shows the property belongs to V. Delisi, who leased it to Yeates Bros. in October, 1914, but they resold to Louis Pappas, who in turn sold to John Andros. John Andros holds another lease, good from 1st of April, 1922 (expiry of other lease) for 5 years, and the name of Louis Yeates appears on the back of the lease as a guarantee to V. Delisi.

Mr. O'Connor asserted that John Andros should be encouraged in his business, since he had worked hard and faithfully and was now ready to branch out to make extensive improvements in the premises.

About $850 was being spent in improvements and $12.00 for six tables. An expensive electric sign and fixtures were also contemplated and a very up-to-date and handsome building would result.

He trusted that if there was a discussion of the project by Mr. Knight or others before the council that he would be notified.

Towards the end of the meeting Mr. L. R. Knight appeared, followed by representatives of local billiard parlours, Messrs. Geo. Brown, Charles Reeves, Herb. Williams and A. G. Simpson.

L. R. Knight.

Mr. Knight said he understood that it was the expressed intention of the council to grant no more licenses, and that he believed that a Peterborough concern was trying to break into the business to the detriment of those already engaged in it. No more licenses should be granted, especially under the present circumstances of business that has sufficient members in it already.

Mayor Kylie.

Mayor Kylie said no license had been asked for recently, and that he did not think it was the council's business to interfere or look into the matter until such application was made.

Alderman Wilkinson—I had a letter showing that Yeates Bros. were trying to buy another location in town and so they appear to be behind this present extension of Andros'.

The question then arose whether it was legal to grant a license specifying the number of tables to be used, and it looks as if the license may go through for two tables if it is legal, and if it is not no license will be given at all. Next meeting will put more light on the question, and as Mayor Kylie says, "They'll only put another brick or two on the building."

The following extract from the Revised Statutes, Municipal Institutions, Chap. 192, Sec. 419, in regard to the power the council of a town, re billiard pool and bagatelle table license, may be timely:

"The Council has power for limiting the number of licenses to be granted, and the number of such tables which shall be licensed and for revoking any license granted."

TY COBB IS AFTER ALL THE LEAGUE HONOURS

Canadian Press Despatch:

CHICAGO, Sept. 8.—Ty Cobb apparently is determined to capture all of the honours of the American League.

The averages released to-day, including the games of Wednesday, show the Detroit star leading the league in batting with a mark of 386, having 194 hits, which indicates that he will pass the 200 mark again, topping the list in two base and three base hitting, second in scoring and fourth in base stealing. Leading pitchers participating in 29 or more games, rated according to earned runs per game, show Cicotte of Chicago leading with 23 won and 11 lost, and an average of 1.86 earned runs.

Farmer And Wife Did The Harvesting

She Managed Carriers in Barn, While He Loaded and Drew In.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Sept. 6.—The farmers of this district have had an exceptionally satisfactory harvesting this year. Scarcely any grain still remains in the fields with the exception of oats, which are a remarkably heavy crop.

The farmers hereabouts have done the work mostly themselves, many of them aided by their wives and daughters in cases where the sons are away. Though a large number of factory workers in this city offered their services for farm work, there was very little call for them.

One Stamford farmer and his wife succeeded in doing all the work of harvesting themselves. They own patent loaders for use in the fields and carriers in the barn, so that they had no difficulty at all. The wife stayed in the barn and managed the carriers while the husband loaded up the waggon with the loader, in the fields, and then drew in the loads.

HOLLINSHEAD CONCERT

The management of the Conservatory have determined that their first concert shall set a high water mark of proficiency and has secured Redferne and Harold Hollinshead and Richard Tattersall for the concert to be given on Sept. 12th.

These three artists have all established a most enviable reputation individually, and to hear them together will indeed be a treat for the music lovers of Peterborough.

They have decided to have popular prices only as the object is not to make money, but to give to the local public a concert that will be entertaining, elevating and instructive, and be something to remember throughout the season.

This will be the only opportunity of hearing either of the Hollinshead brothers this season as they leave within a few days for a long tour which will prevent their appearance in Eastern Canada this year. Tickets may be had at the music stores and the Conservatory.

Novel Methods Of Treatment For The Battle Scarred Heroes

TORONTO, Ont., Sept. 7. — The man who associates healing with the stifling air of disinfectants, bottles and pills, finds Hart House, the centre of the Military Hospitals Commission's work of functional re-education for disabled soldiers in Toronto, a revelation which upsets all his notions of curative measures.

The place is filled with activity, hope and fellowship, and the apathy of men fast growing used to the notion of being crippled, melts like April snow under the optimism of the men in charge, and the miracle working methods which they are employing to restore men to their normal condition.

Fantastic as the idea may appear, the crippled soldiers are dancing, playing volley ball, and other active gym games under instruction, as part of their treatment, and great results are being realized.

Mental Attitude Vital.

The men detailed to Hart House for treatment are those who through injuries have lost control of certain nerves or muscles. They may be unable to control a hand, a foot, or leg, or a bullet in the brain may have destroyed a motor area. Still other cases are those where injury or shock has affected some mental process, such as memory, concentration or association.

All the conditions following these injuries have their psychological as well as physical aspect, and a man's mental attitude toward his condition is shown to be vital.

"'I can't must be eradicated to start with," explained one of the instructors, "and to foster a self-forgetfulness we play games in which a whole class of men with various disabilities are engaged. This induces the men in the excitement of the moment to perform the natural action, which if more time were allowed for thought, they would believe beyond their powers."

Games Popular.

The games afford the boys a great deal of enjoyment and the period allotted to them is all too short. The gym rings with their shouts, and the funny figures they cut, when a refractory muscle causes them to do the unexpected, are regarded as only another occasion for laughter.

They play more like "white hopes" than invalids, in spite of the fact that they may be dragging a foot after them. The foot in a few weeks' time will in all probability be giving perfect service again.

The dancing is Swedish, not the society brand, but still demanding grace. The music is the choice of the returned men, and many of the selections come from the musical shows which ran on Broadway while they were mired in the trenches of Flanders.

Strong on Syncopation.

These tuneful ditties percolated even to the front lines, and when it was put up to the boys to choose records for the gramaphone used for their dancing classes, they demanded Irving Berlin's best, and many a back tending to curvature has been restored to its normal straightness by the witching lilt of a ragtime music which wouldn't let a fellow stop.

Scientific Theories Underlying.

Casual as it may seem, the dancing is all carefully planned to meet the needs of the group engaged in it, by an instructor who knows the difficulties of every man under his care, and the particular movements which must be persisted in to restore him to his normal state. Daily improvement can be noted in the increased ease with which they perform steps which were at first all but beyond them.

This work at Hart House which has been worked out under the direction of Dr. Edward A. Bott, with such success as to attract international interest, will be carried into other Military Hospitals of the Commission as soon as proper provisions can be made.

A Summary Of Crop Report

Rains Have Delayed Harvesting Live Stock Situation

Following is a sumary of weekly crop reports made by District Representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

Rains have delayed the harvesting, and considerable oats remains to be cut, or in the stook. However, there has been practically no sprouting reported this season, and all the grains are as a rule well up to or above the weight of the measured bushel as revealed by threshing. A little hay is reported to be still unmade owing to the rush of the grain harvest. Corn is now growing rapidly, but it is still a week or two behind its usual development at this date.

The area of new fall wheat so far is not up to the average owing to the drouth, and the lack of experienced plowmen. The government tractors are actively endeavoring to overtake this shortage.

Potatoes are promising a good yield—recent weather having been most favorable for them. Turnips, sugar beets and other roots are looking fine where well hoed and weeded.

Nearly all vegetables have done well this season. Melons in Essex are now in full season but the crop is rather light.

LIVE STOCK.

Prices for cattle and hogs are lower than owners care to take after the stiffer figures prevailing recently.

There is plenty of grain and other fodders on hand and there is little likelihood of any animals being sacrificed this fall or winter.

Pastures have again picked up, and there is a good milk flow for the time of year.

The demand for farm labour, except for good plowmen, has not been so keen during the past week, although a number of experienced ditchers, both hand and machine men, could find employment at good wages. The farmer's family has been a great factor in harvesting this season. The Wentworth Representative reports to having seen a farmer, his wife, two daughters and an eight year old son drawing in oats. Some outdoor threshing has been necessitated on account of so much hay being in the barns. The demand for tractors continues strong.

OBITUARY

CHARLES WHITRED

Charles Whitred died early this morning at the family residence, 123 James street after a short illness. He came to the city eight years ago from Hastings, since when he has been employed with the De Laval Company. He leaves his wife, one daughter and one son to mourn his death.

The funeral will take place under Orange auspices on Monday at two o'clock from the Salvation Army Barracks to the Little Lake cemetery. Service at the house at 1.30.

JOHN CONEYBEARE.

The death occurred yesterday of John Coneybeare, aged eighty-six years and seven months, at the residence of his son, Mr. Coneybeare, No. 9 Glenelg Street West.

The late Mr. Coneybeare was born in Devonshire, England, and was the eldest son of a family of ten, all of whom have predeceased him.

Fifty-two years ago he moved to Woodstock, Canada, bringing with him his son, William. Here he lived up till thirteen years ago, when he moved to Bancroft to live with his son, George, then coming to Lindsay with him, six years ago.

In religion he was a Methodist. All his life he enjoyed the best of health up to a short time before his death.

He is survived by three sons, William and George, of Lindsay, and Philip, of Saskatchewan, and one daughter, Mrs. James Meagher, of Peterborough.

The funeral at will take place Sunday at half-past two from the family residence, 9 Glenelg Street, West, to Riverside Cemetery.—Lindsay Post.

PATRICK MAGUIRE.

Patrick Maguire died last night (September 7th), in St. Joseph's Hospital, after an illness of a few days' duration.

FURNITURE CLEANED.

First blow the dust out of the crevices with a pair of bellows or a good sized bellows or bicycle pump. This will greatly assist in cleaning. Make a suds by dissolving half a bar of white soap in a gallon or more of water and add half a cupful of common salt.

This will prevent the cane from turning yellow. Apply the suds to the chair with a scrubbing brush first one side and then the other, using plenty of water, so that the can may be thoroughly soaked.

Place it out of doors to dry in a shady place. This will make the can firm and tight and renew its elasticity.

Lesson in Scientific Complexion Renewing

Everyone has a beautiful skin underneath the one exposed to view. Bear that in mind and it will be easier to understand the correct principle in acquiring a lovely complexion. Nature is constantly shedding the top skin in flaky particles like dandruff, only much smaller in size. In abnormal conditions, or in advancing age, these particles are not shed as rapidly as in robust youth. The longer they remain the more soiled or faded they become—that's the immediate cause of "dead complexion."

It has been discovered that ordinary mercolised wax, to be had at any drug store, will absorb these worn-out particles. The absorption, while hastening Nature's work goes on gradually enough to cause no inconvenience. In a week or two the transformation is complete. The fresh, healthy-hued, youthful underskin is then wholly in evidence. You who are not satisfied with your complexion should get an ounce of mercolised wax and try this treatment. Use the wax nightly, like cold cream, washing it off mornings.

Test Of City's Water Supply

In Future Water Will Be Tested at Pumping Station

The test of the city's water supply from time to time has been taken over by Mr. R. S. Dobbin, superintendent of the waterworks department. In the past this work has been done by Mr. C. A. G. Spence, to whom it was assigned when Dr. A. W. McPherson, Medical Officer of Health, went overseas. The testing instrument and equipment have been removed from the room in the city builings and taken to the pumping station.

The analysis for last month which was made by Mr. Spence, was submitted at a meeting of the Utilities Commission held yesterday afternoon. The report closes with the following remarks:

"The water on the whole has been in a satisfactory condition, showing slight organic infection only on two occasions."

Deliberation is a good thing that has broken few records.

Downeyville Man Got Off a Moving Train at Burketon and Sustains Fractured Skull

Jas. D. O'Brien, a well known resident of Downeyville, is in St. Joseph's Hospital suffering from a fractured skull. Mr. O'Brien was returning on the C.P.R. local from the Toronto Exhibition, and had to get off at Burketon to transfer to the Lindsay train. He had been in conversation with friends in the train and thinking he had missed the station at Burketon, jumped from the train while it was moving. His head evidently hit the track and he received a serious fracture of his skull. He was brought to Peterborough on the midnight train in an unconscious condition and taken by Comstock's ambulance to St. Joseph's Hospital. Although a man of 66 years of age he was extremely active and healthy and this, it is hoped, will render his chances of recovery brighter. Mr. O'Brien is an uncle of Rev. Father Fergus O'Brien.

MAJORITY OF THREE IN SENATE FOR C.N.R. BILL

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Sept. 8. — The C.N.R. Bill will pass its second reading in the Senate on Monday night by a majority of probably three. Senator Curry of Amherst, N.S., who seldom appears at Ottawa, will be on hand for the occasion to help the bill through. The two bolters from the Conservative ranks will be Senators Landry and Montplaiser; Senator Beaubien is an uncertainty. The Government's position has been strengthened by the announcement that an amount will be fixed beyond which the arbitrators cannot go in making their award for the $60,000,000 of stock which Canada is to buy. As this amount has to take into account the fact that the C.P.R. is a competitive buyer, it will likely be as high as $52,000,000.

Mr. Tucker has unexpectedly come face to face with Mr. Cutting, from whom he had frequently borrowed money.

"Er—aw—what was the denomination of the bill you loaned me?" he asked nervously.

"Episcopalian, I guess," said Mr. Cutting. "At any rate, it keeps lent very well."—New York American.

IN MEMORIAM.

In loving memory of my dear brother killed in action September 8th, 1916:

Short and sudden was the call
Of one so dearly loved by all.
The blow was great,
The shock severe;
We little though his death so near,
And only those who love can tell
The pain at not saying
The last farewell.

Nearly a million men have been provided by the British self-governing Colonies since the beginning of the war for the firing line in Western Europe and participation in the various campaigns against the Turks. Nevertheless the Britishers of the Overseas Dominions keep on sending more men despite their scanty populations.

Major Lord Innes-Kerr, with his St. Bernard dog (the mascot of the camp), is in the centre. The Americans may be distinguished by their sombrero hats, the Canadians wearing pith helmets. Pte. Richard Palamountain, of 41 Ordnance St., Kingston, formerly employed at Royal Military College, has sent home the two accompanying graphic pictures of the battle of Vimy Ridge, in which he was wounded by shrapnel and suffered from German gas. He is now in a Canadian Hospital at Epsom, Surrey, England, and expects to be home by Christmas. In the narrow photo Palamountain is shown the first in a line of eight men. He is marked by a cross. The identification marks on the photo were placed there by him, and they will enable you to trace the movements of the boys who won such lasting fame in this great advance.

THAT "the female of the species is more deadly than the male" has its latest proof in the Russian Legion of Death, the battalion of Russian women who have been fighting Germans on the east front. Each of these women carries a ration of cyanite of potassium in her knapsack, preferring death to German captivity. The leader of this remarkable group of Amazons is Mme. Botchkaier, who is here shown wearing several medals for bravery. German soldiers do not care to encounter these soldieresses. The German officer is so proverbially chivalrous that whenever he comes within range of the L. of D. he puts his hand to his heart and says to the C. O.: "Kind madam, Kameçad! Do not take your cyanide of potassium. Kill yourself with my revolver and let me have the poison. We need it."

Record Cobalt Shipments

That the various Cobalt Mines are taking advantage of the present price of Silver is evidenced by the fact that nine Cobalt Companies shipped an aggregate of fourteen cars of ore last week, containing over one million pounds. This is a record for any one week during the current year.

ADANAC. No new developments are reported from the Adanac Mine. Stoping is still going forward as fast as conditions will permit, but it is estimated that it will be three weeks or a month yet before a full shipment of ore will be made up. Any delay in the initial shipment would seem to be advantageous to the Company owing to the continuous and steady rise in the price of the white metal.

McKINLEY-DARRAGH have cut a new high-grade vein averaging four inches in width on the 250-foot level. The extension of the famous Cobalt Lake fault vein has also been discovered on the 400-foot level, which gives every indication of developing into a large tonnage of good mining ore. The alterations to the mill are being pushed ahead as rapidly as possible, and within a short time the mill will be treating 250 tons per day.

NIPISSING. The directors of the Nipissing Mines Company are scheduled to meet about September 20th, for dividend action, and in usually well-informed quarters the belief prevails that an extra distribution to stock-holders will be ordered at that time. The belief is based upon the high prices for silver recently prevailing and to the strong financial position of the company.

OPHIR. The development work at the Ophir is progressing very favorably, and reports from the property show that they are drifting on a vein at the 410-foot level, which is heavily mineralized, and there is every indication that they will run into high-grade values.

Shrewd investors are now becoming alive to the wonderful profit making possibilities, and are quietly placing orders "at market." In our opinion a Bull market is imminent. Don't let this opportunity get by.

NERVES OF THE STOMACH

Were Weak and Inactive as Result of Nervous Prostration — Lost Twenty Pounds — Had to Take Sleeping Powders to Get Any Rest.

St. Catharines, Ont., Sept. 10. — Many people never realize that the movement and action of every organ of the human body is dependent on the energy supplied by the nervous system.

When the nervous system gets run down there is weakness throughout the entire body. You feel tired and languid and your stomach and other digestive organs are similarly affected. Appetite fails, digestion is poor, you do not get the good of what you eat and gradually grow weaker and weaker.

This process can only be stopped by such treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, which goes directly to create new nerve force and thereby to invigorate the whole human body.

Mrs. George S. Elise, 46 Davidson street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "My husband had an attack of nervous prostration, and, although he doctored for some time, and tried different other medicines, he could not get relief. He had to resort to sleeping powders given him by the doctor to make him sleep. The greater part of the trouble seemed to be with the nerves of his stomach. He began to lose weight, and kept on going down until he had lost twenty pounds. We had read advertisements in the newspapers for Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and noticed that it seemed to be doing a lot of good for people troubled with nervousness, so my husband decided to try it. He found benefit almost from the start, and continued this treatment until he had taken about twelve or thirteen boxes. The results were most satisfactory. He is now enjoying good health, sleeps well, and has gained back nearly all the weight he had lost. He also uses Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills occasionally, and thinks them an excellent remedy. I have also used this latter medicine for dizzy spells and liver trouble, and was completely cured of these complaints. We think a great deal of Dr. Chase's medicines, and cannot speak too highly of them."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, a full treatment of 6 boxes for $2.75, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Do not be talked into accepting a substitute. Imitations only disappoint.

Every Ton of Coal Will Be Under Federal Supervision In Conservation Programme

Dr. Garfield Prepares to Put Drastic Measures Into Operation—Government and Home Needs Will Be Cared For First and All Waste Will Be Eliminated.

MANY INDUSTRIES MAY BE SUSPENDED

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.—The scheme worked out by Dr. Harry A. Garfield, coal administrator, for government control of the coal supply during the war, is as follows:

Absolute federal supervision of every ton of coal available is to be undertaken. Every industry in the United States comes under the scheme, which as a war measure is one of the most far reaching and drastic that could be conceived.

Coal will be distributed through the country by means of an elaborate staff of coal administrators, according to the actual needs of the different communities.

Coal required for government work and the operation of the railroads will be apportioned first, for family use, second and for commercial needs third, according to the importance of the industry affected. There will not be enough coal to supply all demands, and it is expected that some industries of minor importance will have to suspend operation.

Transportation Big Problem.

According to the data presented to Dr Garfield, the greater problem is that of transportation It will grow worse as the winter months come on, according to railroad officials, owing to the fact that car efficiency is less in cold weather and that navigation on the great lakes and on many rivers will be suspended.

Information colelcted by the Federal Trade Commission in its investigation of the coal industry and by the Geological Survey show that the mines are producing only about seveny per cent. of their capacity. The hope is that this may be increased, with the addition of mine labour, to about seventy-five per cent. of capacity. Officials are unable to see how the production can be extended beyond that, because of the shortage of cars.

Officials believe there is a great consumption of coal which is not essential. There are companies manufacturing products that the country could get along without during the war, and there is much other waste, they believe. For instance, attention was called to the number of electric signs in cities of large population.

Statement by Dr. Garfield.

Mr. Garfield issued this statement:

"The Fuel Administrator is immediately to choose a representative of the Fuel Aministrator in each States and territory. He will also appoint in each State, in conjunction with the State representative, a committee of citizens who, with the representative, will assume direction of the regulation of the sale of coal in that State. No person will be appointed, either as a State representative or on any of these committees or any of the committees mentioned below, who is connected with the local coal industry.

"Each State representative as soon as appointed will choose a committee of citizens to represent the fuel administration in each county of the State and in each city in the State having more than 2,500 population.

"The State representative and the State committee will be chosen directly by the Fuel Administrator with the approval of the President.

"The county committees and the city committees will be chosen directly by the State representative.

"The State committee will at once ascertain the amount of coal in the State available for use during the coming winter and the amount of coal needed to meet any deficiency in the supply based on last year's consumption

New Prices Will Be Fixed.

"It will be the duty of the various committees to ascertain and report to the fuel administration the reasonable retail margin (viz. the cost of local distribution and a reasonable dealers' profit to be allowed). This margin, when duly fixed by order, together with the cost at the mine named by the President, the transportation charge and the jobber's commission when sold to a jobber, will constitute the price to the consumer. The fuel administration will make public from its local committees in each community sufficient data to enable the individual consumer to ascertain for himself the established price.

"These figures will be compiled with relation to local needs in order that the fuel administration, may if necessary, apportion the supply of coal with careful regard to the greatest existing needs. There are many communities to-day in which there is no supply of coal available at retail prices.

"A very large proportion of the coal supply available for the coming winter is under contract. These contracts, which are allowed to stand for the present, were made prior to the President's proclamation and very largely limit the amount which may be placed on sale at retail prices based on the President's order.

DYNAMITERS ARE HEADING FOR ONTARIO

THE LOOKOUT

TORONTO, Sept. 8.—Two of Montreal's alleged dynamiters, Henri Monette and Geo Charbonneau, are making their way toward Toronto by automobile. The Toronto police have been officially notified to this effect by the Montreal detectives. The county and Provincial authorities have also been warned to look out for the two members of the gang.

All county and Provincial officers have been armed, and the local officers in the outlying districts have been carrying revolvers since yesterday. The Toronto police do not think the dynamiters will come to Toronto, but are keeping a sharp eye for them. It is stated that Charbonneau sometimes takes the part of woman, and they are being traced from town to town by unpaid hotel and garage bills. The two men are using a stolen automobile in their getaway.

Toronto detectives and plain-clothesmen have been furnished with a description of Charbonneau and Monette. Speaking to the press, Inspector Kennedy, chief of detectives, declined to discuss the truth of the report. He would neither deny or confirm it.

WOULD WALK THE FLOOR FOR HOURS

Nerves Were So Shattered Harold Roy Couldn't Sleep at Night

"Tanlac has given me a new lease on life," said Harold Fitz Roy a well known mechanic residing at Vineland, Ont., in a conversation with the Tanlac representative at Parke & Parke Drug Store, Hamilton, the other day.

"My system had gotten into such a badly run-down condition, he continued, and my appetite was so poor I couldn't eat much of anything. Heavy foods of all kinds disagreed with me so that I could live on nothing but a little milk and toast and cereals. My liver was sluggish and I was very bilious all the time, nerves were so frayed I couldn't sleep well, and many a time I got up in the middle of the night and walked the floor for two or three hours trying to quiet my nerves so I could get a rest. Every bit of energy and ambition seemed to be knocked clean out of me and I was so tired and worn out in the mornings it was all I could do to get out of bed and put on my clothes.

"One day a friend of my wife's told her that she had derived much benefit from using Tanlac, so she got me a bottle to try and, really by the time I had used up half my first bottle I was feeling better in every way than I had in a long time. I am now on my second bottle of Tanlac and if it continues to benefit me like it is at present it won't be long before I will be as well and strong as ever. My liver is now acting all right and I don't feel billious at all, my indigestion is so much improved I can now eat ham and eggs and preserves for breakfast and anything else I want without their giving me any trouble. I am getting on so well now I don't hesitate to speak a good word for Tanlac whenever I can.

UNCLE SAM TESTS WATCHES

(Buffalo Commercial)

If you buy an expensive timepiece Uncle Sam will see that you are not imposed on, in the event you consider a fee of $6 not too much to expend for his services. On Tuesday, April 10th, the watch testing period began at the bureau of standards in Washington. There are four of these tests conducted every year, the one to follow beginning on the second Tuesday in August. Watches may be submitted by manufacturer, retailer of individual owner. The test lasts 34 days.

PATRIOTISM AND SUGAR PROFITS.

(New York World)

What possible excuse is there for the exorbitant prices of sugar? There is no present shortage of the refined product of raw sugar. According to a statement by Herbert C. Hoover, the world's supply of sugar for the current year will be in excess of that of last year and only slightly below the average production of 18,712,997 tons for a period of five years prior to the war. In Cuba, which formerly supplied the United States with 43.1 per cent of its sugar and now furnishes 53.6 per cent, the yield and surplus are normal. Both the cane and beet sugar crops of the United States with 60.4 per cent. of its sugar and conditions in Hawaii and Porto Rico where in each instance production has increased.

Why, then, must consumers pay excessive prices both for sugar and for prepared fruits and canned goods in which it is an ingredient

The swollen profits of the sugar companies give the answer. The prices are war prices only in the sense that they are based on the manufacturer's and grower's opportunity and the consumer's necessity created by the war. They are prices fixed by greed and are wholly without the justification of increased cost of production, as is clearly shown by the $50,000,000 gain made by raw sugar companies in one year.

In fine, the reason sugar is dear is that sugar companies are paying extra dividends. The thriving condition of the industry is its own sufficient commentary on the patriotism of its owners, in taking advantage of a national crisis to put up the price of a national necessity.

EVERYDAY READING

Mankind is made up of few leaders and many followers. It is more and more imperative, in this our day, that spiritual leaders should not only know and experience the salvation that Jesus purchased, but in plain and unmistakable words preach Jesus and Jesus only. There is so much incessant trying to mix truth with untruth, trying to serve two masters, trying to preach Jesus and the law, or Jesus and ordinances, etc., that we turn away with sadness from listening to such preachments. I do not wonder at people who do not think for themselves, falling into a form of Godliness without the power of God, others turning to infidelity, and others running greedily into sin. Men and women are like a flock of sheep, looking for, or needed, to be shepherded In these days, as a whole, the shepherds are failing to look after the sheep, and failing to feed even those who they are in close contact with. God is against those shepherds. Jesus the chief shepherd of the sheep is now calling for the uncared, wandering sheep to come to Him for shepherding and loving care. The great majority of mankind, religious and non-religious, recognize the need of salvation. They are conscious of the fact that life to them is not what life ought to be, and therefore is not satisfactory. Possibly there are many even in our own city, who are crying out, "who shall show us any good?" They are saying the churches, Salvation Army and other movements have failed them. They listen to the preaching in the buildings and on the street corners, and hear the fine music and singing, but how hungry some of them are for the real bread of life, the bread that came down from heaven.

Some years ago, here in Peterborough, I was a member of one of our large churches, over which a certain preacher had charge. I had no personal knowledge or experience of the salvation of Jesus Christ, I became awakened (through other instrumentality) to see my sinfulness and need of being delivered from the same. I made known my state of mind to the preacher. He accused me of being uncharitable, but gave me no counsel in regard to my getting delivered from the guilt and power of sin. Possibly about two months later I met the preacher in a back street of our city and as was customary with him, in an affable manner he saluted me and shook hands with me, asking me how was I. I replied I was very well in body, but spiritually I was all wrong. He replied, Oh, oh, I must have a little talk with you some day. Good-day. I have to say I never had the little talk. Perhaps the reader will not be surprised, when I say, to myself I cursed the church and cursed it bitterly. I could relate other cases of a similar character just as sad and more so; but what is the need of telling you, what many of you know by personal experience? Why continue in all this confusion and unreality? Why not seek truth and salvation for ourselves? Why not come to Jesus, the great Shepherd and prove his sufficiency to care for, comfort, nourish, and bless, as only He can bless?

"MOUNTAIN MADNESS"

By Anna Alice Chapin

Closing the door she seriously prepared for her undertaking. She thanked Heaven that she wore a safety habit easily detached. She dropped it off, and stood a slim, boyish figure in high boots and knickers, which she wore under her riding skirt. She discarded her long coat, too; it was clumsy, and as she was certain to get drenched anyway it didn't make much difference whether it was through whipcord or linen shirtwaist. Her hat she then flung aside, and her heavy gloves. She had the paper in the bosom of her blouse, taking the precaution to wrap it first in one of the gloves, as a protection against the wet.

Then dressed as "light" as she reasonably could be, carrying only her slender crop, she boldly opened the door again and, staggering a bit from the force of the gale, went boldly out to where her horse was fastened. But it was then that Fate played upon her one of her most unfriendly tricks. Just as she swung herself into the dripping saddle, a fresh access of tempest filled the heavens with flame and thunder. Her mount, just freed from the hitching-post, backed away frantic with terror, and plunged down the heavily wooded mountainside,—in precisely the opposite direction from that which she had intended to take! She was powerless to control the beast, for he was half crazed by the lightning and thunder. In a moment, sick with dread herself, she saw that she must not stay on his back. At any moment she might be thrown, dragged from her saddle by the crowding shrubbery, bruised against a tree. And if he kept up this plunging gait, he would almost surely go down. She took a deep breath, kicked her foot clear of the stirrup, and waited for the next terrific illuminating glare of lightning.

Afterwards, she could never tell just how she did it. It always seemed to her as though some one else, not herself, had actually experienced it.

But, somehow, as the maddened horse struggled downward through that dence shrubbery, she hung up her arms and caught a great overhanging branch, black against the throbbing purple-blue light that filled the heavens.

In another second, she had drawn herself up to safety, and sat clinging and gasping there while her horse crashed away from her in the tempest and the dark.

The branch to which she was clinging swayed and shook in the high wind. In the intermittent lightning she took in the outlook. Just beneath her was,—oh, thank Heaven! she had not seen it before!—a deep, ragged gulch as though a monstrous handful had been torn from the side of the living mountain. Had her horse gone into that? She could not know, but she grew dizzy and she thought what she had escaped. Then she began to plan once more. She turned and peered upward toward the cabin from which she had been borne by the maddened horse. There was the light she had left still faintly glimmering, but it looked tiny and far away. She must have plunged down a greater distance than she had guessed. She was debating with herself how to get back, when something happened. It was a huge something—so unexpected, so cataclysmic so sudden and horrifying that she did not at first know what it was. She only realized that the jagged blue blades quivering in the dark above her all at once became merged into one titan weapon of destruction, and after one instant of awful hesitancy fell violently. Not upon her,—though it at first seemed that it was really herself that had been struck. The crash of a great tree just above her, the blaze of a sharp flame, the smell of smoke, and then the smitten tree fell like a wounded giant in her direction. It missed the branch to which she was holding, but threw its mighty weight against the branch of the tree itself. She heard the crackle of beat and breaking wood, felt herself flung forward still clinging to the branch—out over the ragged black pit below. She had no time for terror. She clung blindly as the tree fell and she with it. But instinct working at the last without any conscious mental guidance, made her throw herself out and forward, clearing the thud of breaking boughs as they crashed to the ground. She picked herself up after a few minutes, and at first she thought the storm had ceased, for she could not hear anything just at first. Then her senses came back as clear as ever, and she looked tremblingly on the wreck from which she had escaped. The impossible had happened. The fallen three had carried her over that impassable gulch. It lay black and threatening before her, but she was safe on the other side! The huge trunk lay like a bridge across it. But she fled suddenly. Another and yet another crash told her that more trees had fallen between her and the shack close below the trail. She stumbled down the mountainside blindly, and after a thousand years came to a trail,—a very slight one blazed probably by woodcutters or other mountain folk. Along this she flooded in ankle-deep mud, heading as nearly as she knew in the general direction of Four Trail Crossing.

But Nature who performs miracles on occasion and gives us the strength and temerity to do and dare impossible things, eventually presents her bills. Enid had been through just about as much as even her last jot of reserve force could stand. The darkness, the wildness of the night, the danger through which she had passed, the heavy going on the trail,—also, probably, her recent close proximinity to the tree which the lightning had struck, all combined to leave her in a state of helpless exhaustion,—almost insensibility. Slowly and still more slowly she went forward, until she one great mercy overtook her. She staggered to the comparative shelter offered by a great clump of shrub oaks, crawled under them, and sank into unconsciousness.

CHAPTER XXV
THE LEARNED JUDGE

. . . The statesman thus,
Up the steep road where proud ambition leads,
Aspiring, first uninterrupted winds
His prosp'rous way; nor fears miscarriage foul,
While policy prevails, and friends prove true:
But that support soon failing . . . .
. . . From his airy height
Headlong he falls . . . .
—William Cowper.

They were assembled in Judge Denby's library, and it was a scant three-fourths of an hour later. A trap had been summoned and they had driven through the atrophying downpour to the Judge's house. A silence had wrapped them in the transit. It had seemed to Jack Radnor that the Judge had winced from the thunder crashes and lightning crashes and lightning flares now and again but that might easily have been an impression created by his own overwrought nerves.

In the quiet scholarly library, with its shaded reading lamp and rows of austerely bound works, its heavy curtains and deep easy-chairs, the storm was farther away than in the gay casino. Here a sort of acoustic yet epicurean barrier had been raised against the rough things of the world. The powdered dancers in the ballroom might tremble at the thunderbolts of heaven; Judge Denby in his luxurious study need not even take count of them.

A certain nervousness, or at least illness of ease, in the Judge which had more than once obtruded itself upon Jack's consciousness during that curious evening slipped from him triumphantly as he entered his own domain. It was as though he passed instantly and with a sort of supreme relief and resolution into the picture of harmony to which he rightfully belonged. The color that appeared all at once in his pale, clean-cut face might have been a rush of returning blood and spirit, or the reflection of the deep-red portieres. Whatever lent it, it gave him again his old winsome air of authority and benignity in one. He glowed, in his sober, distinguished fashion, there in his characteristic and fine-flavored room. Friends and enemies must have admired him alike.

Present were his son Ralph, Martin Hale, the prisoner, old Sheriff Huston, and Jack Radnor. It was to be a sort of informal inquiry pending the more strict legal proceedings, and it was largely due to Radnor that the Judge had consented to it. He protested that it was irregular, but consented under Jack's urgency, to consider the facts of the case out of court.

Martin Hale was as still as a statue. From the moment of his surrender and his conveyance to the Denby home, he had said nothing. Radnor had a sense of furious sympathy with him. But now—just to show that men are as unreasonable as women—his interest in Hale did not drown his anxiety about Enid. He ached with the wild yearning to know if all was well with her. It never occurred to him to think that she had left Warm Sulphur Springs. He still flagellated his spirit by telling himself that he was an utter fool to be so upset. But it was nearly one o'clock, and no one knew what had come of her. His frantic efforts to communicate with Augustine, the maid, had availed nothing. Either she was with Enid wherever she was, or she would not answer the telephone. Meanwhile, they sat in Judge Denby's study and the storm poured past them without like a swollen river washing its banks and all but carrying them away.

No one spoke for a minute; then the Judge's son sprang up with an angry backward fling of his shoulders and faced Martin Hale.

"So you're a liar both ways!" exclaimed Ralph, hotly.

Hale flushed darkly and his breathing was labored. However, he controlled himself enough to answer quietly: "I don't lie, Mr. Denby."

Ralph turned to the Sheriff.

"This man came to me on the Ridge," he said, indignantly, "and gave me warning of the train robbery. I can't imagine why he did it, unless he expected a reward of some sort—"

Hale made an angry movement, but again checked himself.

"Then," young Denby went on, "he went into the rotten shooting game himself! Talk about doubled-dyed renegades and turncoats!"

"That's a lie!" burst from Martin Hale, furiously. "I'm no turncoat—to you anyway! I did give the hold-up plot away, because I thought it was only decent. I never told on one of the gang, and you know it, but I did warn you about the train, and, so far as that went, I was with you and ready to fight fair and square, though you may remember I wouldn't pull a gun on my old crowd. I've been straight with you and you needn't try any frame-up on me, pretending to prove I haven't!"

"You've called me a liar without cause. Now I'll call you one with cause! It's a lie that I was in that hold-up, I tell you! I wasn't in the Valley at all that night!"

"Save your breath, man," Denby said contemptuously. "We know you were."

"You can't prove it!"

"No?" Ralph held out the revolver with the initials M. H. on it. "Isn't this your gun, Hale?"

"Sure," said Martin, "but I wasn't carrying it then. I lost it early and—"

"I had it," Jack interrupted. "And I suppose I dropped it in the mix-up."

Judge Denby entered the conversation for the first time. His kindly, handsome, almost unwrinkled face was lighted by just the suggestion of a smile.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Mysterious Sun Spot

It Contained an Important Message.

By RICHARD MARKLY

On the South Carolina coast stands one of those imposing colonial edifices for which that state is famous. It was built during the times when the southern settlers, requiring laborers to work on their tobacco plantations, were importing large cargoes of African negroes, who were held as slaves. It is of brick, with large pillars in front, and, considering its age, is in a remarkable state of preservation. This is because a recent owner has put it in repair.

Like other houses of its kind dating back to the seventeenth century, it was built out of the proceeds of negroes captured in Africa and sold as slaves in America. But the slave trade and its twin brother, piracy, were not in that day deprecated as they are, or, rather, would be, today. He who built the house referred to became one of the most prominent men of his time. Richard Granville was not his name, but in bringing out the antecedents of his descendants it is a far safer name to use than his own. He began life as a sailor, visiting every country where there was trading to be done, and a few of his older slaves, who were house servants and thus enabled the more readily to become conversant with his secrets, handed down a tradition that their master started his fortune in piracy.

Be this as it may, up to the middle of the last century his descendants did not deny that much of his money had been made in the slave trade. In his old age his conscience troubled him, and those who were nearest him said that he desired to make some reparation for his misdeeds. He had a statue of himself made of bronze and set it up on a pedestal in a bay window of his library. The left hand rests on an anchor, and the right holds a sextant—not a mock sextant; a real one, though not of brass, but of the same material as the statue. He left orders that no headstone should mark his grave, and it was supposed that he intended the statue as a substitute for one. At any rate, no one now knows where he is buried.

Different generations of his descendants discussed the statue and wondered at the whim which led their progenitor to erect it. One thing about it excited special attention. Every morning the sun, shining in upon it, strikes the eyepiece of the sextant and, passing through the tube, casts a solar image on the opposite wall. The track of this round spot of light changes with the season, traversing a slightly different path each day. There is another thing that puzzled the owners of the Granville estate. The only inscription on the statue, or, rather, its pedestal, is the date of Richard Granville's birth. And not only is the date given, but the hour and minute.

Of all topics connected with the statue probably the giving of this minute information was most discussed. No one who saw it could remember having seen any memorial giving either the hour and minute of a birth or the hour and minute of a death. But one generation after another passed away and no plausible reason for either the statue or its singular inscription was suggested.

During the civil war Elwood Granville, the owner of the estate at that time, fought for the maintenance of the system in the introduction of which his progenitor took so important a part. Colonel Granville was a religious man and one of those who traced authority for slavery from the Bible. After the war he returned to his plantation and began to run it anew under the system that had been born during the struggle.

A few papers that had belonged to the original Granville were handed down through his descendants. They had been preserved time and again by different persons, but appeared to contain nothing to throw any light on the puzzles connected with the writer or receiver. One day Colonel Granville, while amusing himself with these documents, read a letter from the founder of his house to a clergyman, in which the former said that he would like to leave at his death a fund for the benefit of the negro race in America, but the time would not come for perhaps one or two centuries when such a bequest could be utilized.

Probably the statement had been read a hundred times by Richard Granville's descendants without making any marked impression. But Colonel Granville read it at a time when the negro slave had been just emancipated and called, in all the ignorance induced by his condition, to citizenship. The meaning of the statement, "The time would not come for perhaps one or two centuries," was plain to him. More than one century had passed and brought the changed conditions. This led Colonel Granville, who was eager to help the negro, now that he had become a freeman, onward and upward, to think of the benefits that would accrue from such a bequest as was mentioned in the letter.

Then suddenly two connected ideas entered Colonel Granville's brain. The first was: Might not the writer have secretly carried out his intention, leaving a fund for the purpose that would turn up a century or two after his death? And might not the statue have something to do with its location?

Though he did not know it, he had made a mental leap bridging a century since his ancestor's death. He determined to make a study of the statue and everything that pertained to it. Every morning he devoted an hour to sitting before the bronze, looking at it and thinking about it. Perhaps he fancied that by thus mentally dwelling upon it through some spiritual process the secret would be imparted to him. The inscription engaged his attention, but he could make nothing of it. And yet there must have been an object in putting it there alone, and especially with the hour and minute of birth.

One morning Colonel Granville was sitting, as usual, studying the statue. The sun spot was crawling slowly over the wall as it had been traveling year in and year out for 100 years. The colonel was watching it as he had often watched it before. A third new idea came to him. Might not this sun spot have some meaning?

There seem to be two kinds of ideas in the human brain, those that are original or parent ideas and those that are offspring. The present case is an illustration. The conception that the sun spot might have some meaning was in a measure original (though everything, after all, is but a link in an eternal chain), and it suggested another idea—viz, Might not there be a connection between the sun spot and the date of birth on the statue?

Colonel Granville sprang from his chair. He was confident that he had made an important discovery. What that discovery would lead to was another matter. He had little expectation that it would work out his first conceptions which had come from the letter he had read, but he hoped it might solve the mystery of the statue and the date inscribed upon it. He was not long in inferring that on the day, hour and minute recorded on the statue the sun spot would rest on a part of the wall which would give some information or injunction intended by the man who had erected the statue.

The inscription gave the year, which could be of no importance since the sun traverses the same apparent path annually; the day, June 17; the hour, 10 o'clock, and the minute, the twenty-fifth. In other words, if this were the true explanation, on June 17, at twenty-five minutes after 10 o'clock, the position of the sun spot would mean something. It could not refer to 10 o'clock at night for an obvious reason.

It was early in April when Colonel Granville hit upon this possible explanation. Nearly two months of waiting would be necessary before the spot would reach a position corresponding with the date. The colonel, too impatient to defer investigation for what seemed to him so long a period, was eager to get a computer to come and calculate where the spot would be on the given day. But he knew of no one at hand who would be able to make the calculation. Besides, he had no desire to suffer the obloquy such an act would cast upon him, for when he stopped to think he was forced to admit that no more chimerical idea could enter the brain of man.

So he was obliged to wait and while waiting planned an excuse for what he proposed to do. He determined to make a hole in the wall where the sun spot rested on the 17th of June at twenty-five minutes past 10 in the morning, and he proposed to tell the household that he was looking for a convenient location for a chimney he was thinking of building. Every day after that the colonel watched the movement of the spot with keen interest, and at the end of a month he could calculate pretty nearly where it would fall on the 17th of June. However, he waited till the date came round.

Now, on the 17th of June the sun stands very high, practically at the highest point during the year. Consequently the spot was at the lowest point. In fact, it rested on the floor. The colonel bored a hole in the flooring, inclining it from the sextant to the point of the spot's contact, and, inserting a tube, noted a place in the cellar where the line of vision prolonged would strike. Then one night when the household was asleep he went into the cellar with a lantern, a pick and a spade and began to dig.

He had cut through the cement bottom of the cellar and dug down exactly ten feet when he struck masonry. It was not very well put together, and he soon loosened the upper stones, coming to an open space. In this was an iron box or safe, such as was used many years ago. A blow of the pick knocked off the cover, and there lay a mass of gold coins. On the coins lay a paper, which Colonel Granville read.

His idea derived from the letter written by his ancestor was correct. Here was a chest containing a mixture of English, Spanish and other gold pieces, with a will bequeathing the treasure to found an institution for the amelioration of the negro race.

Colonel Granville replaced the earth over the treasure and left it to think out the problem before him. Such a bequest coming from the original testator would be absorbed in legal technicalities. Besides, Granville would not like the notoriety attached to bringing out so many old coins—coins that he knew came from the price of slaves and probably the loot of piracy. He resolved to say nothing about this strange request, but to dispose of it piecemeal and erect in his own name the institution for which it was intended. This intention he carried out, and many a negro is now being educated with the money derived from the sale of his ancestors.

OIL UPON THE WATERS.

Why It Tames the Billows and Calms the Troubled Sea.

Waves in midocean are caused entirely by the action of the wind. The adhesion between the rapidly moving particles of air which compose the wind and the surface particles of the water causes the water's surface to be dragged along with the air. Small ripples are immediately formed. These ripples soon overtake others near them. They unite, and, due to the friction between the water particles, each succeeding ripple piles up on the top of previous ones.

Just as soon as oil is spread upon the water, however, the size of the waves is reduced like magic. The reason for this is interesting.

Oil, unlike water, has very little internal friction between its particles. The ripples of oil formed by the wind therefore cannot pile upon each other to any considerable height; hence water waves cannot grow in an area of oil placed about a steamer. They begin to fall down instead. By the time these waves reach the boat they will have lost their formative ripples, and the result is a perfectly calm surface over the portion of the sea through which the boat is making its way.—Popular Science Monthly.

SUFFERED TERRIBLY
For Four Days and Nights From DIARRHOEA

Diarrhoea arises from many causes such as change of diet change of water change of climate, catching cold, the eating of unripe fruits or anything that will cause an excess of bile.

On the first sign of any looseness of the bowels it should not be neglected, but should be looked after immediately, for if not diarrhoea, dysentery or some other serious bowel complaint may ensue.

Miss Florence Harfield, 325 Lauder Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I was troubled with a violent attack of diarrhoea. I suffered terribly with it for four days and nights, and finally I became so weak I did not think I could stand it any longer. My sister advised me to try a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. I did so, and after I had taken three doses I felt a whole lot relieved. I kept on taking it, and by the time I had taken six doses, the diarrhoea had completely stopped. I think it a wonderful remedy, as it is so quick to act. I will recommend it to all my friends."

There are so many spurious "Strawberry" preparations sold that you should see that the name "Dr. Fowler's" is on every bottle you buy. Price 35c. Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

The War Needs of Canada

THE NEED FOR GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF FOOD PRICES

BY BENJAMIN ANTHORP GOULD

TEN

The economists have for years been telling us that there is no way of regulating the action of the laws of supply and demand in determining prices. The fact is that this law is not immutable, that its operation is constantly controlled, and that any definiteness in its action has been contradicted more than ever since the war. At the same time, it is possible to say that the operation of the law itself has not been affected, but that only the supply or the demand has been forcibly regulated. Thus, where a definite price is set for a commodity, it may be argued that as no one is permitted to buy or sell above or below this price all demand ceases for the product at a price higher than fixed, and that hence the law continues to operate. This is of course merely a quibble, as such an instance is actually the case of an artificial law enforcible by penalty over-riding the general law of economics.

It should, however, be clearly understood that often the most effective method of accomplishing a price-regulating purpose is not by a forcible interference with the working of the economic law, but by an artificial variation of either supply or demand in order to permit the economic law to work under altered conditions. This is the means adopted by trusts and combinations to enhance prices, and is the only means open to them. The government on the other hand can use not only this method, but can if necessary enforce direct price legislation by imposing personal penalties for infringing it.

So far as food prices are concerned, regulation through the control of imports and exports is comparatively easy in maintaining a minimum price for staples where home consumption exceeds home production, and a maximum price where the contrary is true. In Canada our production of food is far in excess of our commission, and export regulations can keep prices down to any desired point. The one chief danger against which we must guard is not to establish this price-level so low as to lessen production, which during the war must be kept as great as possible. It is therefore necessary to see to it that the producer shall receive a price which shall yield him an adequate profit after taking into account the increased cost of production, and further to stimulate production, not only on the dollars and cents basis, but by urging it as a patriotic duty. Both moral and economic influeunce should be used to make the farmer grow all that his his farm can be made to yield, together with regulations in the direction of future productiveness, such as forbidding the butchering of immature stock.

If the total production of a country exceed by only ten per cent the demand for home consumption, the price of the ninety per cent. used at home will be governed by the price of the exportable ten per cent. unless the latter be artificially sequestrated. This is because no particular ten per cent. constitutes the surplus, but it may be drawn from any part of the total production. Lower prices than the prices of this surplus cannot prevail, because in such case the foreign buyers would not take what was offered as surplus, but would buy the cheaper product available at home, and what was offered as surplus would not be exported but would go back into home consumption. Higher prices cannot prevail, because the home consumer would not buy what was offered for home use, but would buy the lower-priced surplus, and another ten per cent. of the production would in turn become surplus and be worth only the export value.

It is thus evident that in regard to all food staples of which a surplus is produced in Canada the government can absolutely control wholesale prices by limiting exports, and publishing export values. This can be done in either of two ways. The private owner may be allowed to arrange his own foreign sales, but permission to export may be withheld so long as prices are above the determined figure. The way to accomplish this would be to forbid exportation except under permissive licenses, to be taken out for each export shipment, and to refuse such licenses until prices were at the desired level. The other method is for the government itself to offer a fixed price, preferably at the point of export, and to forbid all private exportation. Under existing circumstances the government can fully protect itself by making this price one at which it can resell the staples, at cost if it so desire or even at a profit, either to the Imperial Government or the Allies, or to neutrals. If this price be high enough to allow the producer a due profit, he has no right to complain at not being permitted to make an exorbitant profit, and both home consumer and the foreign buyer will be benefitted, as well as the government itself and the taxpayers, if it decides to sell at a profit. It is a practical method of commandeering the exportable surplus at the price determined, and at the same time relieving the general public by making the home price conform to that which the government has fixed as just.

The working of such a system and the ease and swiftness with which it may be put into effect is admirably illustrated by what has been done in regard to Canadian cheese. The price of cheese up to the late spring has been subject to lost violent fluctuations, and was governed only by the opinion of speculative buyers as to the future course of the market. Cheese prices on the same day varied at different cheese factories as much as two or three cents a pound. This uncertainty as to the value of milk for cheese-making also affected injuriously the stability and price of other dairy products. Late this spring individual exportation was stopped, and on behalf of the British Government, which established cheese prices in England, a price of 2 3-4 cents a pound was offered at Montreal for cheese of a fixed grade packed in a specified manner. Instantly all fluctuation of price ceased, and cheese which had sold as high as 27 cents at the factory sold at prices varying from 20 7-8 cents to 21 3-8 cents. This variation was caused by the location of the plants with different freight rates and the slightly varying cost of packing. The cheese-makers knew these costs, and consequently the buyers, the middlemen who before this action had been heavy speculators, were limited to the bare cost of doing the business, and have had to content themselves with a profit of about one per cent on the turnover. Exactly the same thing can be accomplished in regard to wheat, flour and other staples of which a surplus is produced, even if owing to greater variation in grades, freights and so forth the carrying out of the reform should be somewhat more complicated.

If such a system be put into operation, the only other matter requiring regulation to govern prices of staples at home would be the spread between retail and wholesale prices, and this can be justly regulated in accordance with conditions prevailing in different localities. If this profit of the middlemen be limited, it may result in forcing some middleman into productive pursuits, and while this might work hardship in individual instances it would be to the economic benefit of Canada as a whole, as the middleman is economically only a necessary evil. The fact that there are more shops than are needed to supply the wants of the community is undoubtedly one of the causes of the high cost of living. The competition between them does not reduce prices, but on the contrary their number and consequent limited business increases the cost of operation and permits the few large and efficiently managed retailers to charge prices which, while slightly lower than those of the corner groceries, are high enough to allow them to make enormous profits at the expense of the ultimate consumer.

The Canadian Food Controller has apparently recognized the difficulty of establishing in Canada prices arbitrarily fixed by law, as has been necessary in Europe. It would be difficult although not impossible to provide this machinery to enforce such direct price legislation, and the same end can much more easily be accomplished indirectly in some such way as I have suggested. It is to be hoped that the public will be promptly informed of the steps which are being taken, and that they be hastened as much as possible, because much dissatisfaction has been caused by the fact that public announcements and orders have hitherto been directed to the consumer, and no statement has been made in regard to proposed regulations affecting the producer, the warehouseman, whether or not of cold storage, the packer, and the wholesale and retail middleman. Confidence in the Food Controller needs to be made general by such vigorous action on his part as will convince the people that he is a strong man, free from influence by any of the great interests. A prohibition of the use of grain in brewing or distilling would be of great value in this regard.

It is well to note that the United States, which has only been in the war five months, has already adopted nearly all the above suggestions, which I have been advocating for the last two years here in Canada, and has stopped exports except under license, and forbidden the use of grain in the distilleries.

GERMANY'S INTEREST CHARGES.

How hopelessly swamped in debt Germany will be when the war is over is calculated by the New York Evening Post in figures showing that if the war lasts through 1917 the German debt will have increased $23,500,000,000 during the war. Of this the 5 per cent. interest rate and a sinking fund of 1 per cent. to 3 per cent. would leave an annual charge of about $1,500,000,000 a year after peace. This is in mad contrast with the total annual revenue of slightly over $930,000,000 before the war, and spells absolute bankruptcy.

PARADISE OF ARTISTS.

Story of a Curious Incident That Happened In Japan.

William M. Chase, the American artist, used to tell in the course of a lecture on Japan the following story of an incident in which he figured in that oriental paradise of artists:

I was standing on a railway platform in Japan, waiting for a train and whiling away my time by watching a particularly beautiful sunset.

Suddenly a freight train pulled in and, stopping in front of me, cut off my view. Being a good American and trained in a very proper respect for "business," I merely turned philosophically away and proceeded to look at something else. In a moment, however, the station master appeared at my side and inquired with the politest of bows if I had been enjoying the sunset.

I admitted that I had and smilingly accepted his apology for the intrusion of the train. Of course I recognized that trains were the first consideration in stations, I said.

Imagine my surprise, then, when the little Japanese shook his head firmly. "But no," he said, bowing even more deeply than before; "the train must not be allowed to obstruct the honorable artistic traveler's honorable aesthetic enjoyment"—or words to that effect. "I will cause it to withdraw."

And he actually did precisely that!—Exchange.

May In Church.

A curious custom has been observed from time immemorial at Old Weston, Huntingdonshire, in England. The church there is dedicated to St. Swithin, and on the Sunday most nearly approaching St. Swithin's day the edifice is strewn with new mown hay.

The tradition is that an old lady bequeathed a field for charitable purposes on condition that the tenant provided the hay to lessen the annoyance caused by the squeaking of the new shoes worn by the villagers on Feast Sunday. There are other explanations—one that it is an offering of the first fruits of the hay harvest, and another that it is a survival of the custom of strewing the church (when the floor was only beaten earth) with rushes.

The tumeric, which yields a yellow powder, grows wild over a considerable portion of Porto Rico and is fairly abundant. It is used by natives as a dye for the fibres from which hammocks are woven, for ribbons, cloths, and the like.

The Russian Commander-In-Chief Revolts

STATE OF WAR EXISTS IN PETROGRAD

Korniloff Dismissed From The Command Of The Russian Army

Premier Kerensky Issues Proclamation Revealing a Plot by the Generalissino to Assume Control of Government---Korniloff's Revolt the Gravest Event Since the Revolution and May Carry the Bulk of the Army With It, Although Kerensky Has Taken Prompt Steps.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)
(By Wm. G. Shepard, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

PETROGRAD, September 10.—Petrograd was formally declared in a state of war to-day. Premier Kerensky issued a proclamation revealing a plot by General Korniloff, Commander-in-Chief of the Russian armies, to assume control of the Government. Korniloff was immediately dismissed.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, September 10.—Premier Kerensky has declared that a state of war exists in the town and district of Petrograd. Kerensky has ordered General Korniloff, Commander-in-Chief of the Russian armies, to resign in consequence of General Korniloff's demand for supreme power. General Klembevsky has been appointed Commander-in-Chief.

KERENSKY'S PROCLAMATION.
(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, September 10.—Premier Kerensky has issued the following proclamation: "On September 8 a member of the Duma, M. Lvoff, arrived in Petrograd and cabled upon me in the name of General Korniloff to hand over all civil and military powers to the generalissimo who would form a new government at his pleasure. The authenticity of this summons was afterwards confirmed by General Korniloff himself, who had a conversation with me over direct telegraphic wire between Petrograd and main headquarters.

"I therefore, for the maintenance in the country of liberty and public order, am taking all measures which I shall announce at the proper moment to the people. At the sime time I order General Korniloff to hand over his functions to General Klembovsky, Commander-in-Chief of the armies on the northern front which bar the way to Petrograd, and I order General Klembovsky to assume provisionally the functions of generalissimo while remaining in Pskov. I appeal to all citizens to remain calm, maintain the order necessary for the welfare of the Fatherland and to the navy and army to tranquilly and faithfully fulfill their duty in defense of the Fatherland against the foreign enemy."

FORM A DIRECTORY.
(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, (Sunday) Delayed — Eleven Cabinet Ministers have been in continuous session in the Winter Palace to-day considering measures to face General Korniloff's revolt which in conversations with the Associated Press correspondent the Ministers admit is the gravest event since the revolution. So far, except for the deposition of General Korniloff, which the General is apparently determined to defy, no measures have been decided upon, but discussion is proceeding on a plan to constitute a directory of five men vested with full power. The names so far submitted for membership in this body are Premier Kerensky, Vice-Premier Nekrasoff, M. Ekobeloff, the Minister of Labour, M. Tereatchenko, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and M. Savenoff, Assistant Minister of War. The above evidently indicates what is practically an absolute dictatorship by Kerensky. Korniloff's revolt may or may not carry the bulk of the army with it.

LONDON, September 10.—Field Marshal Haig in his official report of to-day says that British troops last night consolidated the positions captured during the day southeast of Hargicourt on the Somme front in France. At several parts of the front German raiding parties were dispersed. We took anumber of prisoners in the course of the night in patrol encounters north of Langemarck and northwest of Monchy Le Preux.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, Sepetmber 10.—Successful raids were made by the French last night on German positions in the Champagne and Argonne regions, the French War Department announced to-day. On both banks of the River Meuse there was a violent artillery bombardment. The French successes in the sector of the Fosse and Cauvrier Woods was complete and a number of new prisoners were taken. The statement follows: In the Champagne and in the Argonne successful surprise attacks upon the German trenches enabled us to capture material and prisoners. Upon both banks of the River Meuse the artillery fighting continued all night with violence. We completed our success of September 8 in the sector of Fosse and Cauriers Wood. We reduced the resistance of isolated units and took new prisoners. The Germans did not renew their attacks in this region. Additional information confirms the importance of the repulse which the Germans yesterday sustained. Their fierce counter attacks succeeded each other despite extremely heavy losses inflicted upon the enemy by our fire. At several points our troops repulsed as many as five successive attacks and partly decimated the German units advancing. Elsewhere the night was calm.

Berlin Admits Germans Were Pressed Back at Haigicourt and Villeret--French Make Successful Raids in Argonne and Champagne Regions.

BERLIN, September 10.—German advanced forces northwest of Lake Malik, on the Macedonian front yesterday retreated before superior French pressure, says the official statement issued to-day by the German War Office. The Teutons retired in the direction of the heights southwest of Lake Achrida.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

BERLIN, September 10.—British troops yesterday pressed back slightly German reserves at Hargicourt and Villeret on a narrow front, according to the official statement issued by the German General Staff. Early to-day, the statement adds, the Germans recaptured the position to the east of Hargicourt.

ANOTHER LOCAL OFFICER AWARDED THE MILITARY CROSS

Lieut. David J. More Who Enlisted Here as a Private in the 21st Battalion Honoured For Bravery in Lens Fighting

"CONSPICUOUS GALLANTRY"

The following cable from Stewart Lyon, Special Correspondent at the front of the Canadian Press announces the awarding of a Military Cross to a well-known Peterborough boy, Lieut. D. J. More of the 21st Eastern Ontario Battalion. Lieut. More, who before joining the colours, was employed by the Canadian General Electric Company, enlisted here in September 1914, as a private in the 57th quota to the 21st Battalion. At Kingston he was promoted to Sergeant and after reaching France won his commission as lieutenant on the field The news will be gladly received by his many friends.

Mr. Lyon's cable is as follows:

Canadian Headquarters in France (via London), Sept. 9.—Lieut. H. Bainridge Johnson and Lieut. David James More, both officers of an Ontario battalion, have been awarded the Military Cross for conspicuous gallantry during a raid into the enemy's lines a few days before the attack on Hill 70. The raiders, who numbered several hundred men, were at some points held up by strong fire, which was cut under their supervision Johnson also carried one of his men Johnson also carried one o fhis men who had become a casualty, back to our lines.

Private Henry Lorne McFadyen, of the same battalion has been given a Distinguished Conduct Medal for splendid devotion to duty while acting as a stretcher-bearer. When the raiders withdrew several wounded men had to be left behind in a shell-hole close to the enemy's lines. McFadyen remained with the men two days and a night, used his clothing to bind their wounds up and make them more comfortable, and eventually brought all the wounded men back into our own lines.

For services performed under circumstances of great danger in securing the co-ordination work of the artillery and infantry during an assault of an enemy position, Lieutenants James Howard Ellwood, Blayney Edmond Scott, Leslie Frank Burrows and Lawrence Byron Tillson, officers of the Canadian Field Artillery, have received the Military Cross, and Frederick Graham Johnston of the same branch of the service, a bar to Military Cross. Captains Thomas Herbert Bell and Stanley Graham Ross of the Canadian Medical Corps, for conspicuous gallantry in the evacuation of the wounded during forty-eight hours spent under heavy shell-fire on the battlefield of Lens, August 15 and 16, have been awarded the Military Cross.

The award of the Military Medal to twenty-four non-commissioned officers and men of a French-Canadian battalion, which did gallant work at the capture of Hill 70, and had already earned high praise for its fine achievement at Courcelette, shows that the men of Quebec Province had a full share in our recent victory

NEW PEACE OFFERS EXPECTED FROM HUNS

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, September 10.—(Official)—London believes that Germany will make very definite peace offers before winter, suggesting the immediate cessation of hostilities on a status quo basis. This offer by Germany will most likely be refused by the Entente Powers, but the German public opinion will thus be prepared for further concessions to the Allies by the German Government.

74TH COMING HERE.

KINGSTON, Sept. 10.—It is expected that Petawawa Artillery Camp will close about the end of the month. The weather is decidedly cold at nights now. The 72nd Queen's Battery will come to Kingston, the 73rd will go to Belleville, the 74th to Peterborough, the 75th to Brockville, and Capt. Shaughnessy's Ammunition Column to Ottawa or Bermuda.

The Kingston Whig says:

A very enthusiastic meeting of the Great War Veterans Association, with thirty-four new members present, was held on Friday evening in the Base Recruiting Office. Sergt.-major Dyto presided.

The question of salaries for instructors in vocational training work being inadequate was before the meeting. It was decided that further information be secured and action will be taken to have a substantial increase made.

The announcement was made at the meeting that splendid rooms across the street from the British American Block on Clarence street had been obtained. These will be furnishd and used as a club room by the returned men.

The Lindsay Post says:

The Great War Veterans' Association has come to stay. The committee were very active Thursday. They interviewed both local press managers, also the Mayor, who received them with open arms and will do his bit to help our brave boys along in their effort to secure suitable club rooms, where they can welcome their returned comrades and give them the comforts they deserve. They also interviewed Lady Hughes who has very kindly consented to speak to the Daughters of the Empire at their next meeting and try and obtain their cooperation in making the tag days, viz., Sept. 21st and 22nd, a decided success.

The following letter has been received by Mrs. W. Hill of Lakefield from her son, Pte. Jos. R. Hill, M. M., who was wounded on August 15th in the fighting around Lens, France:

Princess Street Hospital,
Manchester, Eng.,
August 20th, 1917.

Dear Mother,—I have been admitted to hospital here in Manchester, Eng., after having been wounded on August 15th, during the great Canadian advance at Lens. I was slightly wounded in the hip and have two wounds in my left arm; one in the muscle and one in the forearm. I have not heard from Sherman but hope he is safe and sound. My arm is fairly bad and will take months to heal, so I am pretty certain of being sent to Canada this time. This is the third time I have been hit and the second time I have made England.

I am feeling fine and looking well, but I am pretty sure I will never go to France again. Eighteen months' service in France, wounded three times, besides having won a King's decoration is a record few men can equal, and it's about time the conscripts took a turn now.

I must close now, so good-bye.

SWEDEN IS ACCUSED OF VIOLATION OF NEUTRALITY

LIEUT. D. J. MORE,
Of Peterborough, who has been awarded the Military Cross for bravery in the Lens fighting. Lieut. More enlisted here as a private in the 21st Battalion, and won his commission on the field.

United States Government Makes Public Translation of German Advices Regarding Ships, Which Kind of News Was Sent From the Swedish Minister's Office to Buenos Aires.

CAUSES A SENSATION

Canadian Press Despatch.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—An international sensation was furnished by Secretary Lansing yesterday when he gave to the press copies of despatches containing unneutral information for the German Government, sent in the Swedish code through the Swedish Legation in Buenos Aires by the German Charge d'Affaires at that capital. These despatches, with a brief introductory note by Secretary Lansing, amount not only to a direct charge of unneutral conduct against the Swedish diplomatic representative to Argentina, but a virtual accusation of a double-dealing against the Swedish Government itself.

The Secretary of State's disclosure makes the Swedish Government, already suspected of pro-German tendencies, stand accused before the world of having acted as a go-between for the despatch of military and other unneutral information valuable to Germany, otherwise cut off from obtaining advices concerning the operations of enemies. Whether the United States Government and the Governments of the other allies will break relations with Sweden remains for the future to develop.

WILL ASK SWEDEN TO EXPLAIN.

An opportunity to explain will be given the Swedish Government before further steps are taken by the United States. It is inevitable that the German Charge d'Affaires at Buenos Aires will be dismissed by the Argentine Government, and not unlikely that relations between Germany and Argentina, already strained, will be severed. It is also inevitable that the Swedish diplomatic representative at Buenos Aires will be recalled unless the Argentine Government hands him his passports without waiting to hear the disposition of the Stockholm Government. No other course would satisfy the United States and the nations engaged in war against Germany.

Part of the information sent by the German Charge d'Affaires at Buenos Aires through the Swedish Legation under cover of the Swedish diplomatic cipher code, guaranteed by the good faith of Sweden against use for unneutral purposes, was notice to the German Government that Argentinian seamers were nearing the port of Bordeaux, France. With a true respect for the policy of frightfulness, the German diplomat recommended to his chiefs in Berlin that these vessels "be spared if possible, or sunk without a trace being left."

As far as the United States Government knows, nothing happened to these two vessels. One despatch sent through the medium of the obliging Swedish Legation indicates why the German Charge d'Affaires was willing that these ships might be spared: Argentine ships are small and—as his message is to be construed— could bring little food or other supplies to Germany's enemies. But if the German Government could not resist the satisfaction of having them sunk by U-boats, the job should be done so that no tell-tale trace of the Argentinian vessels would be left and no members of the crews should be spared from

POSSIBILITY OF ALL SCANDINAVIA BEING INVOLVED

Revelations of German-Swedish Intrigue Causes Sensation in London, Washington and Buenos Aires

TO-DAY'S DEVELOPMENTS

Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner:
(By Lowell McKett, U.P. Staff Correspondent).

LONDON, Sept. 10.—The possibilities of all Scandinavia being involved in the war were seen in London today, following American revelations of German-Swedish intrigue in sending messages from Argentine through the Stockholm Foreign Office.

The disclosures are regarded as of the highest importance, and mean practically the ending of the U boat activities. The submarines have been traversing Norway's three-mile limit, regardless of the illegality of the act. But an Allied fleet operating from a Norwegian base would be able to hem the U boats inside German waters, the naval experts assert. One immediate result of the exposure of the Swedish-German connections will undoubtedly be the British prohibition of the use of the cipher in Swedish cables. In the meantime, England looks to the possibility of the Argentine abandoning her precarious neutrality. Regardless of whether the South American Republic actually breaks with Germany, it is felt here that Argentina's moral force must surely be thrown definitely on the side of the Allies.

This is done to get us to adopt a system which has for its object the improving of our roads systematically, according to approved standards, such standards as are now recognized by the various states of the union and the European countries; a system to replace the indifferent way our roads are now being cared for. Why should a County Council hesitate when the Act is so absolutely fair, and so self-evidently in the interest of the great mass of our population who use our roads—the farmers. The condition of the highways of a community is generally regarded as a standard of its progressiveness and public spirit.

SAVE TO SQUANDER.

Speaking in Toronto at the Exhibition, Mr. N. W. Rowell, Liberal Leader, and patriotic Canadian, in demonstrating that a government, lavish in expenditure, when every dollar counts, cannot teach the people of the nation the thrift and saving the time and situation demand, said:

"I do not believe that precept without practice will arouse the enthusiasm of the Canadian people, and if our Government wants the people to save their money, they should not spend money on public enterprises which are not absolutely needed till after the war. Surely, in the days of a great crisis which the people of the allied countries are facing—if the conclusion is not reached by some other reason than a military reason—it is apparent that we in Canada must save and eliminate extravagance in every instance possible."

We have had, on the part of the government, from the beginning of the war, not example of thrift, but an encouragement to extravagance. We had in the beginning, waste in the government's carelessness or tacit sanction of scandalous stealings in the purchase of supplies, horses and munitions making to the tune of millions; and even to-day, when the financial stress and strain are approaching the breaking point, the expenditure of millions on "public enterprises which," as Sir. Rowell says, "are not needed till after the war"—for instance that "public" enterprise represented by the Canadian Northern Railway "deal" which involves committing the country to between thirty and sixty million dollars. Then we have the three millions odd lavished on the Quebec and Saguenay Railway, a clean case of concealon to the demand of a member of the big interests.

Another little thing that shows the government is willing to vote considerable sums of "enterprises" with, not public need, but an approaching election, their only excuse—for there is no justification. In the main estimates appeared an item of $60,000 for "repairs of government telephones and telegraph lines." But in the supplementary estimates, which synchonize with a pending election, the sum is increased four fol —not for "repairs"—an excusable expenditure—but for new work only excusable in view of an election.

With these and countless other instances that could be cited, it is shown that the government, instead of saving the people's money and setting an example of thrift, are, considering the circumstances, squandering it on things that can wait till after the war—if it were not for an election.

The people of Canada, millions of them, are not practicing the saving and thrift the time demands; and they can't be expected to do so; the government, that urges thrift and saving, does not set an example. When the people see the government playing into the hands, and filling the purses of the millionaires, and then preaching thrift, saving, pinching and paring to the people, the people are in a mood to tell the government to go to——where this government is bringing the country, if its extravagant course is permitted to continue, and the people in the matter of selfish interests takes its cue from the government.

The millionaire and the profiteer do not hold out their "mitt" to the Borden Government in vain.

Writ Issued For $20,000 For Breach of Promise

Cobourg Widow is the Defendant in a Supreme Court Action

(Cobourg Star)

In Monday's issue of Dun's Bulletin appears the announcement that John Creighton, barrister of Toronto, has issued a writ of $20,000 against Mary Blackburn, of Cobourg, for breach of promise. The case, if it comes to trial, promises to be an interesting one.

On August 7, 1917, Creighton, who styles himself a solicitor in the Supreme Court of Ontario, sent an announcement of his engagament to Mrs. Blackburn, the wedding to take place in September, to The Sentinel-Star, and which appeared in our issue of that week. The following week Mrs. Blackburn invaded our sanctum sanctorum and informed us there was nothing to it, and would we please deny it, as she was not engaged to Creighton, and he had no authority from her to send in the announcement. This denial we made.

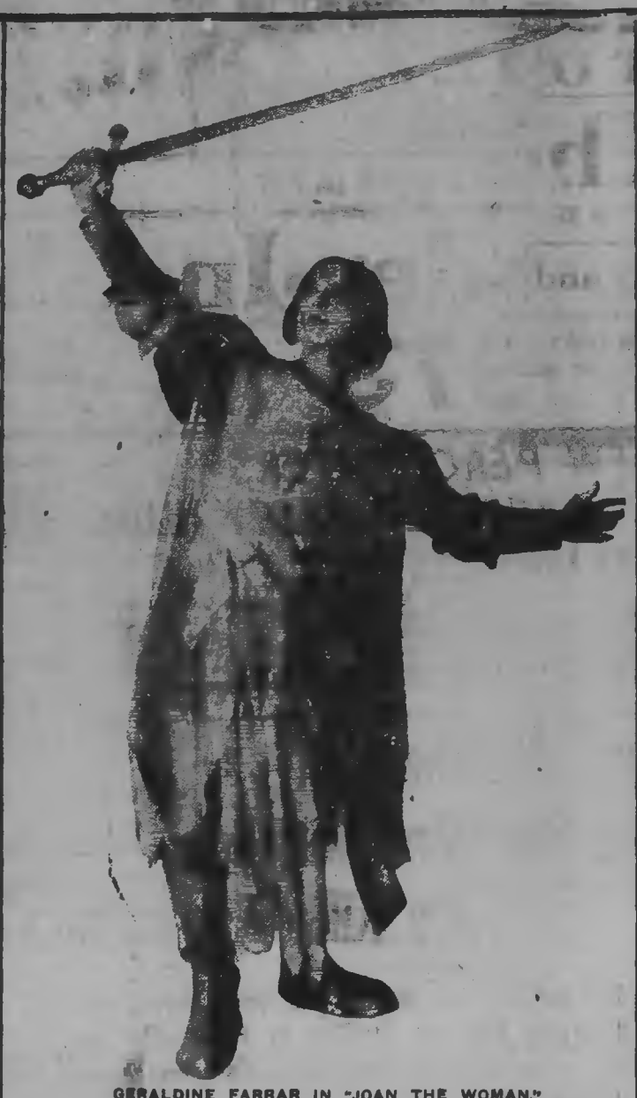
Creighton come down last week to visit his lady love, he having received a letter from her, written by another party, that she had broken her arm and was unable to write. On reaching the house he was unable to gain admittance, and then he went to Chief Ruse, whom everyone goes to when in trouble. He informed the Chief he was afraid she had died of heart failure, knowing as he did the weak condition of her heart, and would he go up with him and take some keys to unlock the doors. The Chief, always willing to do anyone a good turn, went along and on arriving at the house were met by Mrs. Blackburn with a stout cane in her hand. She told Mr. Creighton she did not want him around her place, and gave the Chief instructions to keep him away from her. Even words and the threatening look of the husky cane failed to abate Creighton's love, and, believing there was another man who had stolen the affections of his adored one, he threatened to shoot the one who had supplanted him, and as a lawyer, he said any judge or jury would regard the shooting as one of "justifiable homicide." Chief Ruse persuaded the ardent wooer, seeing the trend of affairs, that he had better return to Toronto. This he did, and the writ for $20,000 is the result of his return.

MARRIAGE BROKER DRAFTED

Hoboken Man's Plea that he has Three Brothers in Prussian Army Fails.

John Muller, of Hoboken, who until recently has been advertising his services in connection with facilitating marriages, will have to give up the rather lucrative practice to serve in the National Army. He claimed exemption before the board of which Mayor Patrick R. Griffith is chairman. His plea was that he had three brothers in the Prussian army, and he did not see why he should be forced to fight against them.

"Brother fought against brother and father against son in the Civil War, and you are no better than they were," was the ruling of the Mayor, to which the other members of the board assented.



GERALDINE FARRAR IN "JOAN THE WOMAN."

Wonderful Film to come to "The Grand" the last three days of this week.

What the Montreal Gazette says:—

"Joan the Woman," an historical photoplay dealing with the timely subject of Joan of Arc, and presenting Geraldine Farrar in the title role, was given its first Montreal presentation at His Majesty's yesterday afternoon, as the beginning of a week's engagement, terminating next Sunday night. The story, by Miss Jeanie Macpherson, brings out the picturesque and romantic aspects of Joan's life, while the story of France's patriot martyr-maid is linked up with events of the day by a prologue and epilogue whose scene is laid in a British trench on the western front, the hero being presumably the reincarnation of an English soldier whose fate was linked tragically with that of Joan, and who was forced into doing her a great wrong after she had proven herself his good angel. The story proper is most effectively told, from the scenes showing Joan's life as a carefree peasant girl, and her call to be the saviour of her country, through her military triumphs and her accomplishment of her dearest wish, to the tragedy of Rouen, a crime for which Britons even to-day must feel shame, although the guilt was shared in almost equal measure by her own fellow-countrymen. The photography is splendidly executed, and some magnificent results have been secured in the handlings of crowds, while the super-natural effects achieved through double exposure are convincing and impressive. Geraldine Farrar makes an ideal Joan, her expressive face and fine dramatic gifts lending themselves admirably to the portrayal of the exalted and poignant emotions of the Maid of Orleans. The supporting cast is a notable one, even in these days when players of the highest standing are to be seen on the screen. Raymond Hatton gives a convincing delineation of the poltroon King, Theodore Roberts embodies all the malignity and saturninity of Cauchon, Wallace Reid as Trent acts with conviction, and Tully Marshall does a clever character bit as the mad monk. The final scenes, showing a grim episode of the battle line in France to-day, in which the young Englishman goes into No Man's Land on a forlorn hope, are most realistically done. The picture is one which makes an unusual appeal at the present time.

THE HUNS OF THE STREET.

During last month the street accidents in New York City increased thirty-one per cent over those for June of 1916, 2,622 accidents being reported for the month, nearly ninety a day. Eliminating the usual eight-hour period for sheep, this represents over five accidents every working hour of the day.

Motor driven vehicles were responsible for nearly one-half of the casualties during the month, 1,097 accidents being directly traceable to automobiles and motorcycles.

The increase of fifteen per cent. in number of accidents in the first half of '17, fifty per cent. of which were caused by motor driven vehicles, indicates that motor cars and unarmored tanks are the Huns to the street. These facts ought to be some sort of an excuse for life, accident and health insurance.

Peterboro' Exhibition Will Break Records, The Directors Expect

If good weather is forthcoming for the last three days of the week the directors of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition are looking forward to the biggest exhibition on record, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. All records, both in attendance and in the number of entries promise to be smashed, and from the standpoint of amusements and special attractions this year's exhibition will be the greatest ever. The Patrick shows bringing many car loads of apparatus and equipment, have already arrived in the city and are making preparations at the Exhibition grounds. Their presence makes possible by far the biggest and most pretentious midway in the history of the local exhibition. Their attractions include an animal circus, athletic show, giant Ferirs wheel, a huge merry-go-round and many other amusements.

The model trench, built and manned by the Great War Veterans, will provide the military feature of the Exhibition and it will be an attraction of great interest. The trench is now nearly completed and will be ready in plenty of time for the Exhibition visitors.

Mr. F. J. A. Hall, Secretary of the Fair, has an office in Denne's store for the purpose of receiving entries.

Says Further Bloodshed Is Unnecessary

Leader of the German Socialistic Party Refers to President's Note

Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner:

(By John Crandens, U.P. Staff Correspondent—Copyright, 1917, by The United Press.)

BERLIN, Via London, Sept. 10.—President Wilson can bring immediate peace, if he will prove by acts the faith in the German people he has expressed in words, Philip Scheidermann, leader of the German Socialist majority party, declared to-day in an exclusive interview with the United Press. "Further bloodshed is now unnecessary, if America believes in and does not underestimate the Reichstag's power and the strength of the German movement which is being pushed irresistably toward democratization of the entire public life," Scheidermann asserted. "It is pushing on although as in America. War offers the worst chance for further development of democratic institutions. The German advance will be quicker the sooner the obstacles of war are removed."

Special significance attaches to Scheidermann's views of the American note and as to Germany's democratization. The German Socialist majority leader is now at the head of a special committee, charged by the Kaiser with investigating Germany's constitutional system and recommending reforms. "For one generation after the war," he added, "the people will be unable to commence another war, and peace will be guaranteed automatically by the law of exhaustion.

"During this time, the cause of democracy and Socialism in all countries will rapidly progress, making it possible to strengthen and extend the securities of the world's peace. I believe this is the last war of civilized nations."

Will Consider Coal Question

A meeting of the Fire, Water and Light Committee will be held this evening to consider whether it would be advisable to secure additional supplies of coal for distribution through the municipal coal yards. Ten cars of coal have been sold and the money paid into the city. To secure further supplies might imply that the city intended to exceed their original proposal to secure only sufficient coal to offset the possibility of a famine and let the local coal dealers supply the rest. This matter will be threshed out to-night.

Light Wanted On Bolivar Street

A number of residents on Bolivar street are complaining of the absence of street lights on that particular thoroughfare. The street is said to be inadequately lighted, despite several protests that have been made from time to time.

TROUBLE DUE TO OUTSIDERS

If Necessary Soldiers From London Will Be Sent to Ford

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

LONDON, Ont., Sept. 10. — Vicar O'Connor, who in the absence of Bishop of Fallon in Baltimore, is head of the Diocese of London, declared to-day that all the trouble at Ford City and the rioting, is due to outsiders. He named the three ringleaders as Dr. St. Pierre and Mr. Degrandpe, formerly of Quebec, and Harry Maisonville, who some time ago figured in a case in connection with Hon. Dr. Reaumes. If necessary soldiers from London will be sent to Ford. Some of Father Laurendeau's friends fear for his life. It is stated to-day that additional insurance was placed on the buildings.

The Harvest Thanksgiving At St. John's

On Thursday next the old church of St. John's will sound the first notes of the thanksgiving for a bountiful harvest from a grateful people. In the absence of Major Canon Davidson, on active service in France, the Wardens cordially invite all St. John's many friends to join with them for this occasion. The Rev. Walter Archbold D. D., at present in charge of the parish will celebrate the Holy Communion at 10 a.m. and will be assisted at the Festival Evensong at 8 by the Anglican clergymen of the city. The sermon at that service will be preached by the Rev. Canon McNab of St. Alban's Cathedral, Toronto. The joyous harvest festival music will be supplemented by a number from Haydn, "Creation" viz., "The Marvellous Work" with soprano obligato by Mrs. W. G. Parks. The chimes will be rung after the morning service.

Meeting Called For Wednesday Evening

On Wednesday evening the Committee of the Whole Council will meet when the accusation against Fire Chief Howard will be dealt with. Chief Howard's reply to the letter from Mayor Duffus, asking for an explanation, was received to-day, and the boards are all clear for the meeting on Wednesday evening.

To-morrow evening the Board of Health and the Board of Works Committees will meet.

MEN APT TO FATTEN IN THEIR THIRTIES

With Increase of Girth They Pass Out of the Apollo Class

At what age does a man definitely pass out of the Apollo stage of youthful grace, take on an appearance that is suggestive of too much food and too little exercise and find a daily reminder in his mirror that he has joined the ranks of the flabbily corpulent and other reminders in shortened breath and heavier motion that he is not so young as he used to be?

Perhaps the definite period of transition from youth to middle age is not to be fixed. There are arbitrary conventions based on the number of years, but we know very well that these are not absolute and are frequently refuted by actual facts. Many a man is young at fifty, and many are middle-aged at thirty-five. Indeed, if we go by some of the physical symptoms commonly accepted—say grey hair or baldness, or both—there are occasional men who become elderly at twenty-three or so and positively venerable before they are thirty.

Most of these external symptoms are obviously unreliable, but there are two, perhaps, that are generally accepted as accurate and traditional by physicians and physical directors. Those are increase of girth and decrease of agility. A man may know that he has reached the borders of middle age when, after a youth of approximately normal dimensions, his waist measurement begins to rival his chest measurement. The doctors say that this tendency toward equatorial expansion begins to manifest itself between the ages of thirty-five and forty and usually attains its ultimate magnificence at about the age of fifty. After the process is well under ways and shows a stubborn resistance to all first-aid efforts to avert it, the fact is commonly recognized as in the nature of a kindly warning to knock off tennis and take to golf.

Of course, some men never get beyond the first evidence of the tendency, and there are many who manage to retain a slender elegance as long as they live. More than a few old gentlemen may be observed who in contour resemble the symbolic bean-pole, and their life-long friends will tell you that they have always revealed this structural slimness.

The increasing waistline, however, is so common a tendency as to have been accepted as a traditional token of age. With it is coupled the tradition of failing agility, and both are popularly supposed, at least by the younger generation, to be certain marks of age, beginning to show at about forty and fairly completing the wreck at about fifty. Somehow this belief persists, and it may be strengthened by the fact that pugilists and baseball players who reach the age of thirty-five or forty at the utmost are classified as "old men." In these two highly specified vocations the popular view is probably justified, but in most other lines it would seem to be tinctured with something of absurdity.

Seldom has the absurdity been illustrated in a more startling way than in a recent despatch from London, which proclaimed the fact that "most of the chorus men now employed on London stages are between forty and fifty years of age."

Such a condition may be unusual, and it was naturally explained by the statement that most of the younger men of the stage are at the front with the British forces. But the mere fact was not enough for the imaginative correspondent, and he had to decorate it with picturesque, juvenile ideas of "old age."

"Producers," we read, "have found that it is best to keep the venerable chorus men at the back of the stage, using them to fill out colour in the various pictures rather than to supply action." By these discreet methods the decrepit facts are at least partially concealed and the average theatregoer is unable to detect the absence of youth. He is spared are painful spectacle of poor old men trying to go through the paces of exuberant juvenility and gasping under the burden of their infirmities. These venerable choristers of forty to fifty, it is said, make up well, and with the aid of grease-paint, powder, and wigs they are almost as presentable as the youngsters — of course, in the merciful obscurity of the back of the stage.

There is at least one thing to be said in favour of these old men. It is admitted that their appearance has improved the singing of the choruses, and their more resonant voices make a bigger volume of sound than the weaker and thinner tones of the youngsters. But dancing, so far as the male chorus members are concerned, has been largely abandoned. We read, for instance, this interesting description:

"In one chorus of a popular revue there is not a man under forty-one years of age, yet they dash across the stage with the same graceful abandon of the peace-time chorus. They can make a fairly presentable initial dash, but thereafter they are relegated to the rear."

Poor old men! They can carry out the bluff of youth for one brief initial dash, and then all they can do for the rest of the performance is to stand exhausted at the rear of the stage and just sing. It is obvious from this demonstration in the London choruses that venerable men of forty-one or so have no business trying to dance. These aged persons ought to be more careful.—Providence Journal.

THE WARNE DRUG COMPANY FINED THREE HUNDRED DOLLARS BY MAGISTRATE DUMBLE

The Case Will Be Appealed by Mr. G. N. Gordon—Magistrate Gives Decision in Test Case and Makes Fine High Enough to Induce an Appeal to Higher Court.

AN IMPORTANT JUDGMENT

In handing down the appended judgment in this morning's police court, Magistrate Dumble said that he made the fine high in order to induce an appeal to a higher court for final judgment. The defendants were fined three hundred dollars and costs. The druggists of the city are contemplating an appeal. The case was laid by License Inspector Stewart.

The Judgment.

The judgment reads as follows:

The defendants are charged with having on the 15th day of August, 1917, exposed or kept for sale liquor without having first obtained a license under the Ontario Temperance Act. Sec. 40.

At the trial it was admitted as follows:

1. That the bottle produced contained Wilson's Invalids' Port Wine, manufactured by Lawrence A. Wilson, Limited, Company, Montreal, and that this company was duly authorized by the Inland Revenue Department to manufacture and dispose of it. That the contents of the bottle was registered under formula number 53 of the Patent Medicine Act of Canada.

2. That defendants kept it for sale and sold it in the original packages.

3. That the defendants are duly qualified druggists and chemists, duly licensed.

4. An analysis of the wine by the Ontario Government analyst, showing the wine, port, contained 35, 22-100 per cent of proof alcohol and was medicated with extract of anchona (quinine).

5. A witness (Wm. Capperthwaite) was called, who swore that he went to defendant company's shop, and purchased a bottle of the wine; price $1.30.

He and another then retired to a stable and drank from the bottle, each taking five to six drinks from the bottle. One of them (Capperthwaite) admits that it made him drunk; so drunk that when he came out on the street he was at once arrested for "being drunk on the public street." He was subsequently fined $10.00 for his offence. The other man got away. It was not known in what condition. Witness stated that they drank about half the bottle and that the wine had an unpleasant taste.

The prescription on the bottle was "a wine glass full before or after meals." The witness evidently did not stick to the prescription.

Evidence was given by Percy Holland of several other purchases of this from defendants' wine by people who bought it, not for medicinal purposes, but to use as a beverage. The wine not only made the drinkers drunk, but, in some cases, they were made sick. They evidently ignored the directions. There was no doctor's prescription or certificate required or given to enable the sales. The bottle sold contained sixteen ounces of the port wine mixture.

Here then we have a Dominion Act protecting the manufacturer who makes and sells port wine containing 35, 22-100 per cent. of proof alcohol and containing extract of anchona (quinine) sufficient to make it somewhat unpleasant but commonly purchased by persons wanting liquor to use as a beverage. The Ontario Temperance Act defines liquor, the sale of which is prohibited, 'to include all fermented spirituous and malt liquors." "Combinations of liquors and drinks and drinkable liquids which are intoxicating, and any liquor which contains more than 2 1-2 per cent of proof spirits."

This Wilson's Port Wine is "liquor" "mixed with another drug," within the meaning of the Temperance Act Sec. '128, but its sale by druggists for strictly medicinal purposes is permitted by Section 128 in packages of not more than one pint at any one time. "But in every such case only under a bonafide prescription of such alcohol, liquor or mixture duly signed by a legally qualified medical practitioner."

Clause 2. "Every druggist shall record in a book to be kept for that purpose every sale or other disposal by him of alcohol or other liquor when sold by itself or forming the principal ingredient in such prescription and shall show every sale, the time, the person to whom sale made, the quantity, the prescription, etc. And in default of such sale or disposal being so placed on record, every such sale shall be held to be in contravention of the provisions of this Act, and subject to the penalties set out in Section 69."

There is no express clash between the Dominion Patent Medicine Act and the Ontario Temperance Act. In the first named Act there are no restrictions. By the latter Act the druggist must keep a reord of sales, stating names, dates, kind and quantity, and name of medical practitioner who made the prescription. The quantity is limited to one pint when a "mixture or six ounce if pure alcohol. Under the Dominion Act the defendant may have committed no offence. Under the Ontario Act they have sold liquor and are liable unless the saving clauses of the Act protect them. I do not think they do. Defendants sold the liquor without a prescription or certificate of a medical practitioner—without any registration of the sale and beyond the quantity allowed, namely, one pint. And without medication sufficient to prevent its use as an alcoholic beverage.

Mr. Gordon submits that under the license issued to Lawrence A. Wilson Company, Limited, that Company may lawfully manufacture and dispose of this proprietary or patent medicine and that this implies a right by the purchasers to sell and dispose of it without any restriction, and that this liquor was medicated with quinine sufficient to prevent its use as an alcoholic beverage.

In the Patent Medicine Act there appears to be no restriction as to quantity that may be sold either by wholesale or retail. Nor is there any regulation of the Governor in Council to that effect. The Provincial Act, the Ontario Temperance Act, does limit and regulate the quantities and requirements to be complied with on sales of liquor, and amongst others, prescribes that on sale of liquor "mixed with any other drug," or medicine it shall be in packages of not more than one pint at any one time, but in every such case only under a bonafide prescription duly signed by a legally qualified medical practitioner. The defence relied on the Canada Inland Revenue Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act under which defendants were duly registered. And upon Section 124 of the Ontario Temperance Act which reads as follows:

"Nothing in this Act shall prvent the sale by a druggist or a merchant, or company dealing in drugs and medicines, or a merchant or company dealing in patent or proprietary medicines, of any such medicine in the original unbroken package, if such medicine contains sufficient medication to prevent the same being used as a beverage."

"Nothing in this Act shall prevent the sale by a druggist, of any tincture, fluid, extract, essence or medicated spirit containing alcohol prepared according to a formula of the British Pharmacopoeia or other recognised standard of pharmacy by reason only that the same contain alcohol, but this shall only apply to any such compound, mixture and preparation as contains sufficient medication to prevent its use as an alcoholic beverage."

Clause 2 of the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act, Act 7-8 Ed. 7, defines proprietary or patent medicine as every artifical remedy or prescription manufactured for internal use of man, the name, composition or definition of which is not to be found in the British Pharmacopoeia, the Codex Medicamentaries of France, the Pharmacopoeia of the United States or any Pharmacopoeia approved by the Minister, or any formulary adopted by any properly constituted pharmacentical association representing the Dominion of Canada approved by the Minister. Mr. Gordon referred to Rex vs. Druggist Sundries Company reported in 31 Dom. Law reports, page 761. I have carefully read it. It is a Saskatchewan case, but I respectfully submit that the judgment is not binding, and is erroneous in reference to the Saskatchewan and our Provincial Act.

In Re Druggist Sundries Company, 31 Dom. Law Reports.

Judge Lamont seems to have been guided in arriving at his judgment by Section 14 of the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act, but I respectfully submit that the said section only refers to cases where a druggist who has sold in good faith a patent medicine which is a fraudulent imitation of the genuine article, but the wrappers were so made as to deceive the druggist. If that druggist pleads that Section 14 and notifies the parties that he claims the benefit of it, then he is entitled to be discharged, but he must pay the costs, unless he has given such notice and given the name of the person he purchased from—that is as far as Section 14 goes, and it does not affect the interpretation of the Saskatchewan sales of Liquor Act, or of our Ontario Temperance Act, save in cases of fraud as mentioned in it.

A patent medicine may be very valuable, but it ought to be used like any other medicine, under the directions, but if it happens to be in a good wine, like that in question, imprudent or intemperate people may use it to excess as a beverage unless restrained. Here the local Government steps in and imposes certain reasonable restraints as a temperance measure.

There are on the outer wrapper of this medicine six certificates of doctors of high standing; all testify to the fine quality of the Port Wine, and of the quinine in solution, but the proprietor prints theron in large letters "A Big Bracing Tonic," "Delicate," "Ruby," "Rich," "Lucious." No doubt he particularly refers to the wine, thus appealing to man's weakness, and persons other than young children and debilitated women, as mentioned in one of the doctor's certificates It is a medicine the sale of which should be under restraint as provided in the Provincial Act.

Judgment.

1. I find that the defendant sold the bottle of Wilson's Invalid Port Wine in question as charged.

2. That it was freely sold without a Doctor's prescription or certificate, and in so-called quart bottles.

3. That the bottles contained one pint, a half pint, and one and one-quarter gills of medicated port wine.

4. That the medicine in it was tincture of arcona (quinine) and that the quinine was not sufficient in quantity to prevent the mixture from being used as a beverage and that in fact it was freely bought from defendant, and used for that purpose.

5. I adjudge that the Ontario Temperance Act is in force in Ontario, and regulates the sale of such liquor or compound.

6. There was proof that the medicated spirit in question contained 35,22-100 per cent. of proof spirits, or more than 6 ounces of liquor.

7. There was no evidence before me that the medicated wine in question was prepared according to a formula of the British Pharmacopoeia or other recognised work in pharmacy or medicine, or other similar official or pharmaceutical compound or preparation or for purely medicinal purposes, the very fact that this wine was proprietary and patented proves that it was not.

8. I find that the liquor in question was a mixture containing liquors mixed with another drug or medicine and was sold in packages containing more than one pint, and was not sold under a bonafide prescription of such mixture duly signed by a legally qualified medical practitioner.

9. I find that the packages of this mixture sold by defendant contained each more than one pint, contrary to Section 128 of The Ontario Temperance Act.

10. I find the defendant guilty and I adjudge that he do pay a fine of three hundred dollars forthwith, and in default of immediate payment that he be imprtisoned for eight months in the common jail of the County of Peterborough. I adjudge that defendant do pay the costs, $9.85.

D. W. DUMBLE,
Police Magistrate.

A SIMILAR CASE IN STRATFORD

Stratford, Sept. 9.—The test case of Mr. Robert J. Easson, local druggist who was charged with selling Wilson's invalid port wine alleged to have been over strength, contrary to the O.T.A., was completed here Saturday before Police Magistrate Makins, who, after hearing the full evidence, reserved judgment until a decision is given out by the Court of Appeal in Toronto on a similar case. The report of the analyst in Toronto showed that the beverage contained 34.26 proof spirits.

Mr. Hone To Be Released From Arms

Peterboro' Teacher to Carry On His Research Work

His many friends in Peterborough will be interested in learning that Mr. A. D. Hone, formerly science master in the Peterborough Collegiate Institute, and now a gunner in the Canadian Artillery at Petawawa Camp, is being held in Canada by the Government, and will be discharged from the army in order to allow him to continue his research work. Mr. Hone had been working on a process of absorbing potash from feldspar, when he decided to resign his position at the Collegiate and enlist in the Cobourg Heavy Battery for overseas work. On learning of his research work, and that he had practically completed his process, the Government have decided that he will be of greater national service in scientific work than as a gunner.

MR. GALLEY'S NEW POSITION

Mr. G. L. Galley, until a short time ago Boys' Secretary of the local Y.M.C.A., is leaving for Toronto on Thursday to enter upon Y.M.C.A. military work in connection with the Base Hospital at Toronto. This is a very importan work corresponding to that carried on among the soldiers in camp, and Mr. Galley's many friends will wish him success in his new sphere.

HIS INJURIES WERE FATAL

An inquest into the death of James D. O'Brien, who passed away in St. Joseph's Hospital on Saturday evening following injuries received near Burketon Junction on Friday evening, was opened on Saturday evening in the undertaking parlours of Lane and Fano, Hunter street, and subsequently adjourned until September 17th. The following jury was sworn in: G. N. Graham, Harry Smith, James Collins, George Woods, A. B. Cranfield, Thomas Bacon, D. A. Donoghue, F. S. Raymond, W. N. Griffin, Robert Beach, J. W. Armstrong and Robert Cleghorn.

The deceased, who was returning from Toronto to his home in Downeyville is said to have mistaken a railway crossing for Burketon Junction, where he intended to get off and change trains for Downeyville. The train sometimes stops at the crossing in question, and on this occasion is said to have slowed down. The deceased attempted to alight, sustaining injuries which caused his death some time later in St Joseph's Hospital.

The late James D. O'Brien was very popular and a progressive farmer of Emily township, where he was born 66 years ago. His farm was situated on the 10th concession, near the Maple Leaf cheese factory. He was a very ardent worker in the affairs of the Downeyville Catholic church and brought up a large family of children, nine of whom, with his wife, survive him.

The children are: Sister Agnes Tracy of St. Agnes Convent, Rochester, N.Y.; Nurse O'Brien of St Michael's Hospital, Toronto; Mary of the teaching staff, Fort William, and Nettie who lives at home. The sons are Private Daniel and Private Francis with the Canadian forces in France, Private Eugene of the United States army, William of Seattle.

The funeral will take place on Tuesday morning to St. Peter's church Downeyville, and from there to St. Peter's cemetery.

A TRIBUTE FROM ACROSS THE LINE.

(Buffalo Commercial.)

Again it is our friends and allies from across the northern border who have smashed the German line. Lens again is the centre of the fighting on the western front and the Canadians have taken the dominating Hill 70 by storm and are within the beleaguered French city at last, driving out the invader. We cannot but take a personal pride in the valor and achievements of our brothers from Canada. Many of our own sons fight shoulder to shoulder with them. All typify the spirit of America. Where honour calls, they are the first to respond. The post of danger and the test of skill are theirs by choice.

PETROGRAD, September 10.—Members of the Russian Cabinet to-day told the Associated Press that the Provisional Government regarded General Korniloff's pronounciament as an act of rebellion which must be ruthlessly suppressed. The Government it is added believed it had enough loyal troops and the support of the Russian people to enable it to put down the Korniloff movement.

"I AM AFRAID EVEN GOD WON'T HAVE ANYTHING TO DO WITH GERMANS."

LONDON, September 10.—Sigfried Paul, aged 57, a German, was ordered recently to leave England. His wife, also German, and a boy aged ten could stay, but as the wife wa unable to get work owing to being a German she decided to accompany her husband to Holland. The man and wife, however, preferred to die by poison and also poisoned the boy. The man is dead, the wife and boy are still alive. Paul left a letter addressed to the coroner, in which he said: "Forced to choose between going to Germany and death, I have chosen the latter. . . . All my life I have been opposed to the military system which has been the curse of the German people." A postscript explained that lack of money had nothing to do with his suicidal intentions. The wife expecting to die, wrote to a friend: "Nothing prevents me going with Freddy to my own mamma, nothing but my loyal feelings to England and sincere disgust and hatred of the German Government and all the beastly people who do these horrible things. . . . I am afraid even God won't have anything to do with Germans. . . . We are just the puppets of fate."

GOING OVER THE TOP IN THE LENS FIGHT

Pte. Carl Noftall, Former Member of the 93rd Battalion Tells How He Was Hit After Reaching German Front Line.

IS NOW IN BLIGHTY

PTE. CARL NOFTAL

Mrs. Wm. Noftall 188 Dalhousie street, has received the following letter from her son, Pte. Carl Noftall, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, who was wounded in the recent fighting around Lens.

London, August 20th.

Dear Mother.—I am writing you to let you know where I am, etc. Well, dear mother, I guess you have heard of me being wounded before now.

Well mother, I got it Aug. 15th in the big advance on Lens. We went over the top just as it was breaking day, and say, dear, it was a lovely morning.

We had a very heavy barrage. It was some bombardment, believe me, dear mother, to come through as good as I did. I am wounded in the left leg and thigh and a couple of places in the back, nothing serious, dear mother. I am feeling fine and am getting along fine. Anyhow, dear mother, I don't think I will be back to France for a long while anyway, and by that time the war will be over. Just a few lines to let you know how I got wounded. I got it in the German front lint, and thought I was only slightly bruised, and got from there to our objective, limping along.

When the stretcher bearer saw it, it was more than a bruise. Well, I walked all the way out to the dressing station. When I got there, dear mother, I certainly felt all in. Well they put me on the train and I went through to the field ambulance. Got my wounds dressed there, had a nice cup of coffee, and then continued my trip to the C.C.S. 23. That's the Canadian Clearing Station. Had an operation on my leg, and say, dear mother, you should have seen me coming out of that chloroform. I certainly did talk and say some funny things, and the funny thing was that I remembered everything I said.

Well dear, mother from there I was shipped to an American hospital, and say, dear mother, they certainly used me fine, everything you wanted. They certainly use a person fine when they get wounded. Well, I was there for three days and then shipped to dear old Blighty. I had a nice trip across the pond.

Well, I landed from Calais, France, to Dover, Eng., and from there to Charing Cross station, London. It's my first time dear mother, in this wonderful city. Just as the ambulance was pulling out I was showered with roses from both sides of the car. I certainly got some greeting into dear old London. Well we went down the Strand, one of the big streets in the city, and just around the corner was the hospital; it is in the centre of the city. Buckingham Palace is only a few minutes' walk from the hospital. When I get a little better I am going to see as much of London as I can, dear mother. Well, mother, I think it's all this time. I will close now, as I am getting sleepy and it's getting a little dark. Send my love to all the family and tell them all I will write as soon as I possibly can, and say, dear mother, could you send me a few pounds to buy some little things I want to get, as you can't draw any money while in the hospital. My address is:

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH NEWS

Invitation to Soldiers—Meetings During the Week

The holiday season being over, the various organizations of St. Andrew's Church are making their plans for the fall and winter's work. The Organist and Soloist were both in their places at the services of the Church yesterday, as also on the previous Sunday. The Superintendent and Teachers greeted a larger gathering of scholars than they have seen for the past two months. A number were still away and they are very desirous that all classes have a full attendance next Sunday, that they may get away to a good start for the season's work, and that all departments may be actively at work.

The Sunday School Council will meet on Monday at 8 p.m. to arrange for the comfortable heating of the Sunday School room and to consider methods of work.

The ushers of the church will meet on Wednesday at 7.45.

MISSION BAND.

The Young Ladies' Mission Band will hold their regular meeting on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock. As this is the first meeting since the vacation all the members are asked to be present.

The Red Cross Society will hold a meeting on Thursday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock. All the women of the church are members of this organization and plans will be made at this gathering for carrying on this most important work during the coming months.

St. Andrews church heartily proffers its hospitality to the soldiers who may be in the city. They are invited to make themselves at home within its doors, and freely to appropriate its privileges of worship and fellowship. The cause in behalf of which those who have rallied to the colors are serving is one with the aims of Christ's Church, and therefore Christian soldiers and Christian civilians are comrades in labouring for the victory which will help to establish the Kingdom of God on earth.

Evangelistic Meetings

Good Attendance at Opening Service in Gospel Hall

Good attendance at the opening service in Gospel Hall.

That the people of Peterborough were glad to welcome back to their city Evangelist Harold M. Harper, late of Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, Ill., was evinced last evening by the good attendance that greeted him as he began another series of Evangelistic meetings in Gospel Hall. Mr. Harper conducted a series of meetings in the same Hall last spring, when people from all walks of life listened to the simple gospel story from his lips.

The meeting was preceeded last evening by a rousing song service after which Evangelist John Gilchrist led in prayer.

Taking his text from Isa 45. 20-22 and for his subject "The Vision of the Cross," the speaker showed the need of the vision from Ver. 20, where people are described as having no knowledge and praying to gods who cannot save. "Right here in Canada," he said, "there are people who know not the living God and are worshipping gods who cannot help them in the day of judgment." Graphically he then spoke of the God of Heaven, both a just God and a Saviour. Just in the sense that He must ever punish sin, even though His Son was bearing it, and a Saviour in His provision meeting the desperate need of every sinner who trusts in the redemption work of His Son.

He closed with an appeal for all to look for Christ and be saved, warning those who refused of the danger that confronted them.

Mr. Harper will speak to-night at 8 p.m. in the Hall, his subject being, "What Isaiah saw." All are heartily invited. Meetings last but one hour.

Sifton Denies Neely's Charge

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 10.—Sir Clifford Sifton this morning entered a point blank denial to the charges made by Dr. Neely at Chatham that he had once promoted among certain Liberal members a campaign against conscription. Handed the paper containing the Neely charges Sir Clifford, stopping in the midst of it, gave a short laugh, remarked "he told a good one" and resumed his perusal of the document. Then setting down his tortoise shell spectacles he dictated a denial.

After telling of meeting Dr. Neely and inviting him to his office, Sir Clifford's statement proceeds: I said that I regretted very much there was likely to be a split on the subject of conscription in which different portions of the country would be arraigned against each other. But that it was quite clear to me that the English speaking Liberals in the House ought not to follow Sir Wilfrid Laurier on this question. Dr. Neely asked me what I thought they ought to do. I said that they ought to organize and repudiate the stand taken by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and at the same time announce their intention of supporting conscription and supporting the government in its war policy.

Dr. Neely expressed thanks to me for my advice and I have not seen him since. If the report given in the press of Dr. Neely's statement at Chatham is correct his statement is a complete misrepresentation of what passed between us."

WHAT CHARLTON SAYS.

Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner:

OTTAWA, Sept. 10.— W. W. Charlton, M.P., recalled the conversation with Sir Clifford Sifton on conscription as follows: Sir Clifford said to me, I am a conscriptionist from the word go. I have two sons overseas and I do not know whether I will ever see either of them again. But I feel that to impose conscription at this time would be an act of criminal folly. There are two and a half million French Canadians in Canada and three quarters of a million foreigners, and to impose conscription now would create internal strife and help the Germans. They would be able to point at the largest of the British Dominions and say, "Look at the disunion of Canada." These are Sir Clifford's words as I remember them. They were not spoken with the purpose of altering my views, nor did Sir Clifford seek me out in order to express them.

Sweden Is Accused Of Violation, etc.

death to furnish evidence of German ruthlessness, and thus probably cause a break in relations between Germany and Argentina, the last important American nation, except Chile, that is still maintaining relations with Berlin.

It was said here that the expressions "spurlos versenkt" would become as notorious as "a scrap of paper." This suggestion of "spurlos versenkt" serves to account for the practice of German submarines in shelling small boats in which crews of merchant ships that had been sent to the bottom were seeking to escape. Not a trace of the ship sunk or its crew was to be left to give evidence to the world of German frightfulness. In sending messages of the German Charge d'Affaires the Swedish Legation at Buenos Aires indorsed this method of inhumanity.

TELL-TALE DOCUMENTS.

The following was issued at the State Department yesterday:

"The Secretary of State to-day made the following statement:

"The Department of State has secured certain telegrams from Count Luxburg, German Charge d'Affaires at Buenos Aires, to the Foreign Office at Berlin, which, I regret to say, were despatched from Buenos Aires by the Swedish Legation as their own official messages, addressed to the Stockholm Foreign Office.

"The following are translations of the German text:

"'May 18, 1917. No. 32.—This Government has now released German and Austrian ships, on which hitherto a guard had been placed. In consequence of the settlement of the Monte (Profegido) case, there has been a great change in public feeling. Government will in future only clear Argentine ships as far as Las Palmas. I beg that the small steamers Oran and Cuzzo, 31st of January (meaning which sailed 31st), 200 tons, which are (now) nearing Bordeaux, with a view to change the flag, may be spared, if possible, or else sunk without a trace being left. ('Spurlor versenkt.') (Signed) Luxburg.'

"'July 3, 1917. No. 58.—I learn from a reliable source that the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, who is a notorious asa and Anglophile, declared in a secret session of the State that Argentine would demand from Berlin a promise not to sink more Argentine ships. If not agreed to, relations would be broken off. I recommend refusal, and, if necessary, calling in the meditation of Spain. (Signed) Luxburg.'

"'July 9, 1917. No. 64.—Without shewing any tendency to make concessions, postpone reply to Argentine note until receipt of further reports. A change of Ministry probable. As regards Argentine steamers, I recommend either to turn them back sinking them, without leaving any trace, or letting them through. They are all quite small. (Signed) Luxburg.'"

AMERICA'S POSITION.

Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner:

(By Carl D. Groat, U.P. Staff Correspondent).

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10. — America's future position toward Sweden will be determined by the explanation she makes of her part in the Luxburg-Lowen code incident. Sweden will issue a diplomatic denial of guilt with some excuse attached, it is reported. To prove that she is not in league with Germany, however, would appear to require the discharge of the Buenos Aires Swedish Minister Lowell, whose Legation forwarded the German Count Luxburg's "Sink them without a trace" messages on the Argentine U boat situation. An upheaval in the present directing Swedish powers would be necessary to remove the taint from Sweden's part—denial or no denial—if held. A break in relations between Sweden and the United States is deemed unlikely in diplomatic quarters. The State Department has not revealed its attitude on that point. Sweden stands as an added menace in the already troublous Russian situation, and her trained men of several hundred thousand man are not wanted in the struggle now. Hence there is likely to be a "Go-slow" policy towards Sweden.

SWEDEN IS BLAMED.

Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner:

(By Charles P. Stewart, U.P. Correspondent).

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 10.—Argentine's greatest anger to-day was directed at Sweden rather than at Germany. It was plain that officials regarded Sweden as having played the most offensive part in the matter. It appeared certain to-day that a speedy demand would be made for the recall of the German charge, Count Luxburg. Buenos Aires does not expect the German diplomat ever to return from his vacation, but to find a haven in Chile. It was not believed that a break between Argentina and Germany would ensue, because, unofficially, the view was taken that the matter was a "personal" one.

Man And Woman Committed For Trial

Charged With Concealing Birth of a Child.

Last week Minnie Nillins of Clarke township was committed for trial at Bowmanville on the charge of concealing the birth of a child. Roy Lockhardt, who is said to be the father of the child, and is alleged to have buried the body, was also arrested in connection with the affair, and at Bowmanville on Wednesday he was committed for trial, but allowed out on bail. The woman is still in the counties jail. Since she left Cobourg last fall she has been living at Lockhardt's mother's in Clarke Township.

Buckwheat Screenings For Poultry Is Very Valuable

A car of this feed was purchased by the Poultry Division, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, through the Superintendent of the Government Terminal Elevators, Fort William. The car contained 30 tons, costing $30.00 f.o.b. Fort William and $35.00 per ton f.o.b. Ottawa—$1.75 per cwt. Of this, fifteen tons were whole and five tons grounds fine.

On receipt, it was fed to all classes of poultry, old and young, the grain in hoppers and the mash in hoppers or in moist mash. The birds after eating a corn and wheat diet did not take to the whole screenings for several feeds, but the mash was readily taken from the start. When the grain was fed in large quantities, the wheat was picked out, and a little care had to be taken in order to have them eat everything up clean. Now after three weeks' feeding, everything is eaten up except a few oat hulls.

A test was made on 200 pullets from 2 to 4 months of age. In twenty days they ate 516 lbs. of grain and 204.5 lbs. of mash. The total gain was 152.6 lbs. that is, it took 4.7 lbs. of the feed to make one lb. of grain at a cost of 8.2 cents.

Dr. Shutt, Dominion Chemist, has submitted an analysis of this product from which we quote the following information: "This product, it will be seen, consists approximately 50 p.c. wheat 40 p.c. wild buckwheat, 2.5 p.c. light oats, 1 p.c. flax seed, one half of 1 p.c. weed seeds, 5.7 p.c. chaff, hulls, etc. The chemical analysis of the ground mash is: Water 14.07; Protein 11.84; Fat 2.07; Carbohydrates 64.53; Fibre 5.36; Ash 2.13—100.00."

E. S. Archibald, Dominion Animal Husbandman, reports that buckwheat screenings as a feed for swine of all ages is very valuable. For finishing and young growing hogs wellground buckwheat screenings will produce as great gains as will a mixture of wheat shorts three parts, fine ground corn, three parts, linseed oil meal one part. This latter mixture at present prices is worth fifty-four dollars per ton on eastern markets.

The above prices were for a car lot and prices for smaller quantities would likely be considerably higher. It is suggested that a number of poultry or swine breeders in a locality club together to order a car. It is a good purchase at a figure near the above price.

First French Soldier Killed

Jules Andre Peugeot.—Recently the French Government conducted an investigation to find out who was the first French soldier killed in the war, and discovered that a Protestant school teacher named Jules Andre Peugeot was the first Frenchman to give up his life for his country. On Saturday, August 1st, 1914, the day mobilization was ordered, the French were ordered to fall back some six miles from the frontier so as to avoid any conflict with the Germans, a conflict which might be used by the Germans as a pretext for war. Corporal Peugeot, with four men, was in a little village near the Swiss German frontier when a German patrol, commanded by Lieut. Mayer, entered the village. The French corporal went forward to protest against this violation of the frontier before war was declared, when Mayer drew his revolver and fired three shots. As Peugeot fell mortally wounded he fired his rifle and killed the German.

HERB. BRANTON MAY LOSE BOTH HIS HANDS

Accidentally Caught in Embossing Leather Machine.

The deplorable accident by which Herbert Branton got his hands crushed in a leather embossing machine at the plant of the Robson Leather Co., Oshawa, last Thursday, may result in his losing both the injured members. The part of the machine which came down on him, when it was accidentally tripped, weighs 5,000 lbs., and it squeezed the muscle out on either side of the hands and crushed the bones, and they have swollen so that circulation is impeded. However, it is hoped that he may not lose his hands as a result.

GEORGE III AS A STAGE HERO

Albert Brown, Well Known Comedian, Coming in a New Role

(By Hector Charlesworth)

Seldom has there been such unanimity as that shown by critics in praise of Albert Brown's production of Paul Kester's romantic drama, "The Love of a King" in which he plays the role of George III of England, both as a young Prince and as an old man.

It requires some daring to present the man who is chiefly remembered by the stubbornness of nature which cost Britain the American colonies, as a stage hero. Yet in the light of history he had many of the elements which fit him for just such honours. All his life he set an example of purity and personal rectitude, which was the more noteworthy because he lived in a dissolute age. It was his hold on the affections of the common people that enabled him to retain popularity in the face of national misfortunes to which he had contributed. And the reason is to be found in the fact that despite his Hanoverian ancestry, he was the first monarch who had sat on the throne since the days of the Tudors who spoke, looked and behaved like an English gentleman.

"Born and educated in this country I glory in the name of Briton" words which he personally wrote into his accession proclamation struck a responsive chord in the hearts of his subjects at home which continued to reverberate throughout his reign. Another characteristic was his hatred of political intrigue, and he once said "This trade of politics is a rascally business. It is a trade for scoundrels, not for a gentleman."

In his drama Mr. Kester brings out several phrases of his character which commended themselves to decent Britishers: his love of hunting and gardening and his passion for the simple life. The dramatist has not attempted to make an historical vindication of George's memory. His purpose was to tell a moving and romantic story, and he found in the historic lineaments of George as a young man, excellent material for a stage hero. Albert Brown will present this novel and brilliant play here on September 9th

TORONTO MYSTERY IS ALL CLEARED UP

TORONTO, Sept. 10.—The mystery attached to the death of Miss Mabel McReynolds, of 117 Pembroke Street, has been removed by the filing of the death certificate at the City Hall.

The certificate gives the cause of death as obstruction of the larynx of two hours' duration — in other words, a slow choking to death. Miss McReynolds took violently ill in her apartment early Tuesday morning after she had returned from the Pekin Chinese Cafe, where she had gone to lunch with her friend and fellow-boarder, Miss Ethel Hickey.

She became unconscious, and was taken in that condition to St. Michael's Hospital.

If necessary the Government will also have the closure applied in the Senate, where it will be necessary to pass the bill before October 6th, so that it will become law.
